WEDNESDAY, DEC. 28, 1904.

THE pure food question is one of national importance, and strong pressure is being brought upon Congress to pass a pure food law. It appears that three millons of dollars worth of fraudulent goods are sold annually in the United States, and that 95 per cent. of this is sent from one State to another. State laws are not uniform. If a New Jersey manufacturer wishes to send food stuffs out of that State he must label them thirty-six different ways to meet the requirements of the different States.

THE Government has made arrangements to send the noon time signals from the observatory at the Capital to the ships at sea by means of the wireless telegraph. This will enable sea captains to correct their chronometers, if they happen to be too slow or two fast. It is daily growing more evident that the wireless telegraph can be put to practical uses. A message has been sent from Kansas City to Cleveland, Ohio, a distance of 725 miles; while in Europe one has been sent from Cornwall, England to Ancona, Italy, a distance of 1,000 miles, not even the Alps interfered. One advantage of the wireless is that it dosn't require poles or the right of way. Every man may have a station on his own farm if he wishes.

THERE is an earnest movement in many cities notably Chicago, New York and Philadelphia, to provide recreation grounds for the common people —small parks with baths, swimming pools, picnic stands, rooms for dancing and play grounds for the children. Chicago alone has 7,000 liquor shops and in one year had 17,000 boy prisoners. If public parks for amusements will attract the boys and keep them out of crime, the money invested will have been well spent. When Prince Albert went to live in England, as the consort of the Queen, he noticed the lack of amusement for the people. "There is nothing to do but to turn rogue or marry," he said to Bishop Wilberforce. And he added: "I never have heard a real shout in England."

IN view of the fact that another wooden steamship plying on the waters of Long Island Sound has been burned to the water's edge with a loss of life, it would seem as if the steamboat men might cease their opposition to the measures proposed by Congress for safe-guarding boats against fire. The President has the recommendations of the board of inspectors under consideration, and both houses of Congress have decided that the laws governing passenger steamships must be more stringent. Is it better for the steamboat owners to make a "hot fight" in Congress than it is for innocent women and children to be burned to death by the thousand? The public demands steel steamships and better service, and President Roosevelt can be trusted to see that safety is guaranteed.

THE farmers of Northern Texas are reported to be so busy sowing their fields for the best cotton crop that they have no time to attend meetings for the discussion of boycotts, just now to reduce the size of the crop or how to keep up the prices. Meanwhile, in Fall River, Mass., with two feet of snow on the ground, the spinners and manufacturers are unable to reach an understanding and the mills stand idle. And now comes Sir Alfred Jones, who presided at the British Cotton Growers' Association in Manchester a few days ago, and says the day will come when America will depend upon the cotton growing fields of the British empire.

THE city of Richmond, Va., through its municipal government, has voted to invite President Roosevelt to visit that ancient and honorable town when he makes his Southern tour. The fact is that so many places in the Southern States have sent invitations to the White House, that the President has found it impossible to accept them, and will have to postpone a general tour of the South until some time in the distant future. The invitations show the desire of the Southern people to meet the President and he will not disappoint their expectations.

THE fact that Mormons wed with dead people, now and then, need not alarm the living to any great degree. Such brides and grooms are sure to be very peaceful and will never interfere with the living, or break the laws of the land. It is the plural dealings with those who are in the flesh which provokes opposition.

TARIFF revision will come just as soon as Congress gets around to it. Just now there are many domestic questions of importance and pressing interest waiting to be decided. Representative Lawrence (Massachusetts) says it is notlike the Republican party to run away from any problem. It may even attack the Dingley bill. That revision of the schedules is needed all admit. Which and when are the preliminary questions.

SENATOR KNOX of Pennsylvania has recently been the recipient of several complimentary dinners. At a dinner given in New York by the Pennsylvania society he said: "I believe the President stands firmly for all that is making for good in our national life. It is a harbinger of national good that he manifestly means to be the President of a whole people." Senator Knox is not alone in this belief—it is the general opinion of the whole country.

THE Senatorial situation in New York is quite interesting; it appears to be a contest between Gov. Odell and Senator Platt. The two are to meet and have an understanding. Odell is for Ex-Gov. Black, and Senator Platt wants Depew. There is a dreadful rumor that Depew is in a fighting mood, but he talks philosophically. "I am an optimist," he says, "and believe things will come my way. If they do not I am a Calvinist and believe the Lord has so directed for my best good." In any event Mr. Depew will probably regard the result as a joke.

A LOST ART.

The Blend of Metals Which Certain Races Used For Tools.

Fame and fortune await the lucky individual who can rediscover the combination of metals from which the Egyptians, the Aztecs and the Incas of Peru made their tools and arms. Though each of these nations reached a high state of civilization, none of them ever discovered iron in spite of the fact that the soil of all three countries was largely impregnated with it. Their substitute for it was a combination of metals which had the temper of steel. Despite the greatest efforts the secret of this composition has baffled scientists and has become a lost art. The great explorer, Humboldt, tried to discover it from an analysis of a chisel found in an ancient Inca silver mine, but all that he could find out was that it appeared to be a combination of a small portion of tin with copper. This combination will not give the hardness of steel, so it is evident that tin and copper could not have been its only component parts. Whatever might have been the nature of the metallic combination, these ancient races were able so to prepare pure copper that it equaled in temper the finest steel produced at the present day by the most scientifically approved process. With their bronze and copper instruments they were able to quarry and shape the hardest known stones, such as granite and porphyry, and even cut emeralds and like substances.

A rediscovery of this lost art would revolutionize many trades in which steel at present holds the monopoly. If copper could thus be tempered now its advantage over steel would be very great, and it would no doubt be preferred to the latter in numerous industries. It is a curious fact that, though this lost secret still baffles modern scientists, it must have been discovered independently by the three races which made use of it so long ago.—New York Herald.

THE COMMON SPARROW.

He Is Not Always the Selfish Vagabond He Is Painted.

The house sparrow has been called a nuisance, a street gamin, a vagabond, a thief, a robber, and this by many so called bird lovers, yet, in my opinion, he is one of our most interesting birds. He is lively, bright, thrifty and brave. No one, not even his worst enemy, can gainsay this. He is also ever ready to help his own kind out of any difficulty into which they may fall.

One day, as I was walking up street past a large mill where dozens of sparrows were collected, I saw something which has much increased my esteem for the so called little street gamin. It was in nesting time, and young birds hardly able to fly were quite common. As I walked on my attention was attracted by one of these in the middle of the road alone. He was sitting there and every little while giving out a little disconsolate chirp. While I was watching him a delivery cart came down the street at full speed. The young bird was likely to be crushed, but I was not the only observer of its distress. As I watched about a dozen sparrows flew down and gathered round it. I didn't know what was going to happen for the minute, but I was soon enlightened. The dash of newcomers fairly hustled the little one out of the way of the oncoming cart and into the safety of the ditch. I don't know exactly how they did it, they moved so quickly, but I think it was in the same way that a man is carried ashore in a crowd. He lows himself a little and the people around him support his weight. The little fellow clearly showed that sparrows are [illegible] as they are [illegible]—American Sportsman.

THE POOR OF BERLIN

HOW THEY ARE SUPERVISED BY THE CITY AUTHORITIES.

Begging Is Not to Be Seen on the Streets of the City, and Rags and Misery Dare Not Lie About In the Parks and Public Places.

"What," I exclaimed in Berlin, "are there no poor in this city? Are you altogether without rags and wretchedness?"

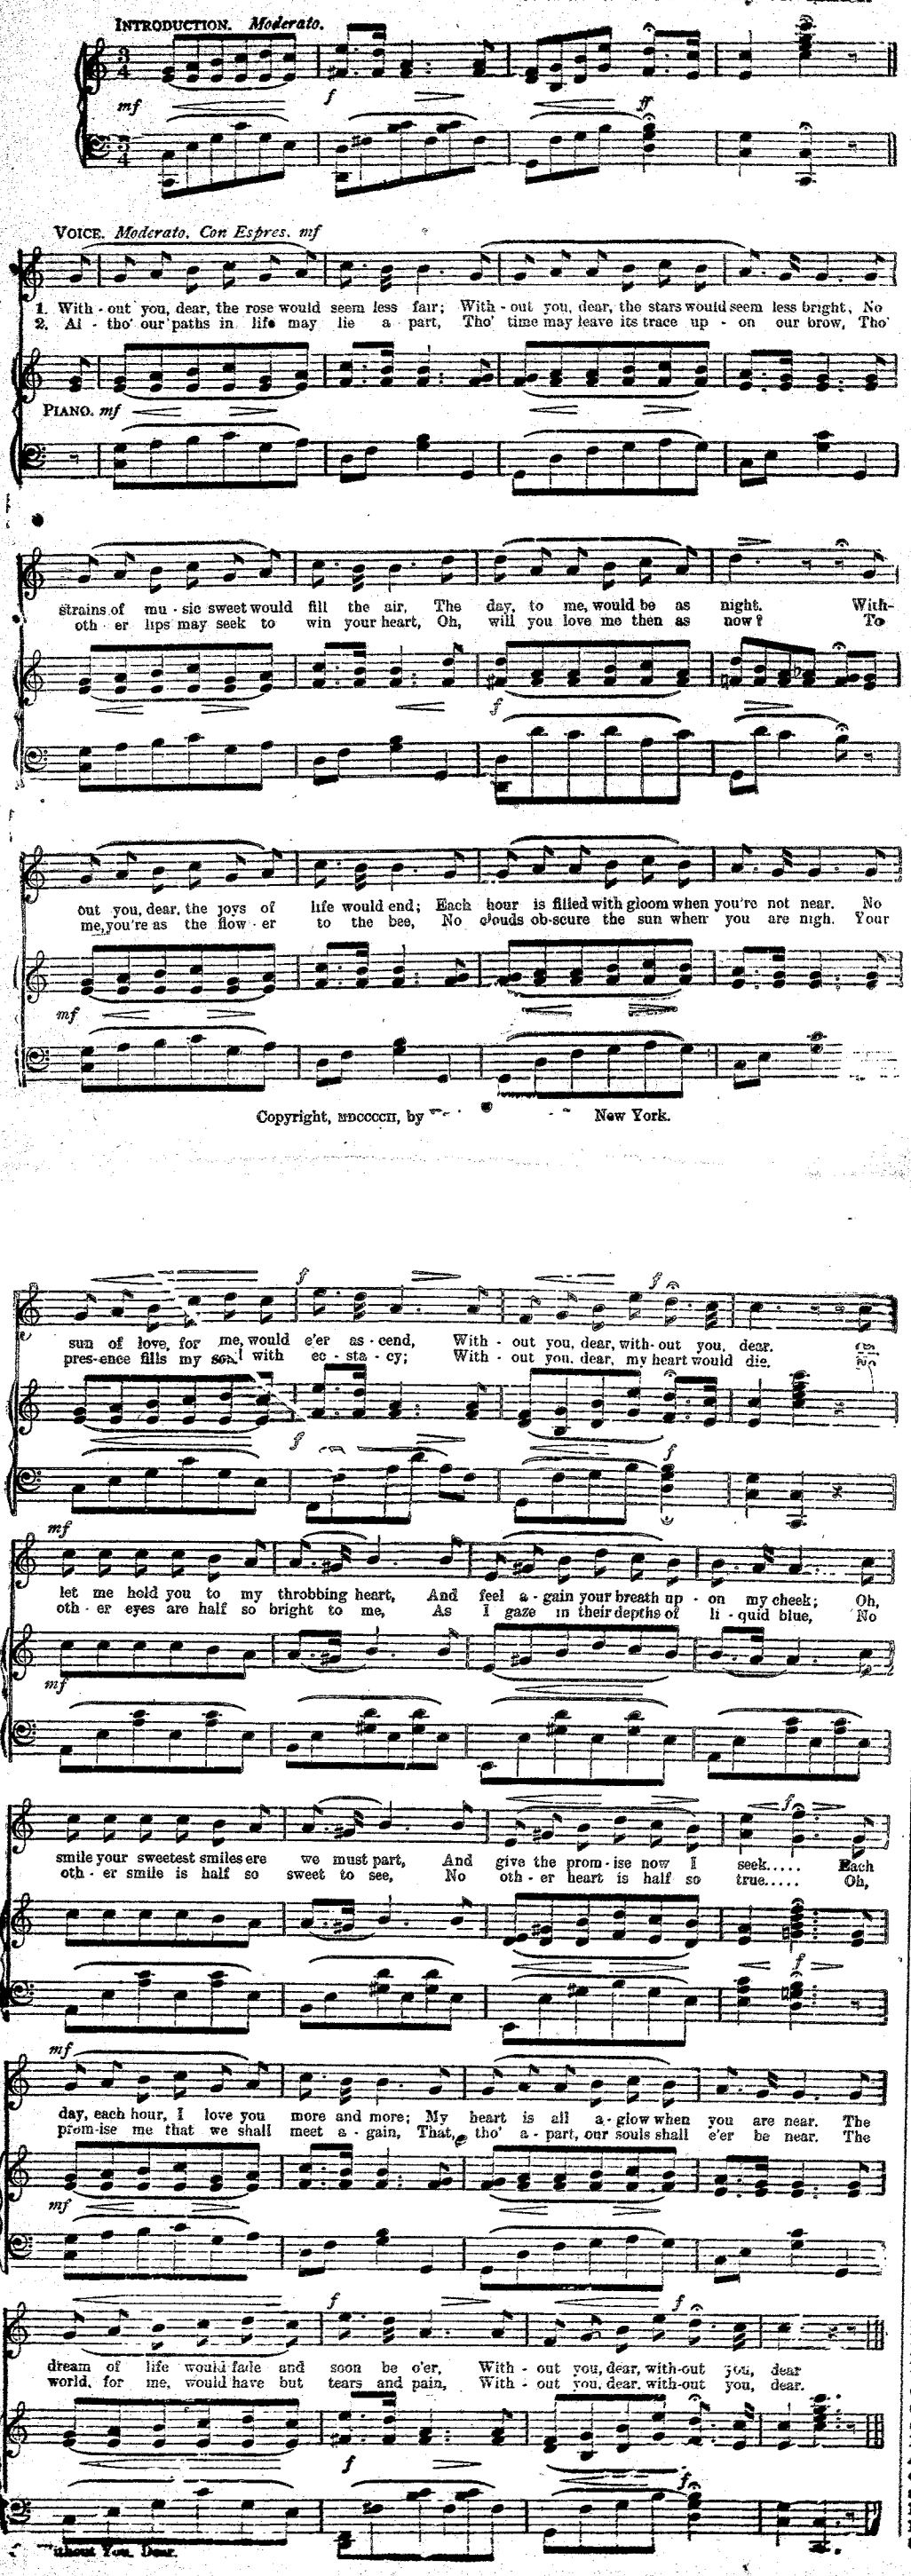
"My dear friend," said the German, winking a heavy eyelid, "we are a very clever people. We do not show our dust bins."

Berlin is ruled by municipal experts. It has its wretchedness and its despair, but these things are not permitted to increase. To be out of work in Berlin is a crime, even as it is in London, but with this difference—in Berlin the municipality legislates for labor in a fashion which makes idleness all but indefensible.

The laws to this end may not commend themselves to English minds, for the Germans are not soft hearted in such matters, but they have this engaging recommendation, they succeed. Let a ragged man make his appearance in Friedrichstrasse or the Lindens or in any of the numerous open spaces, and a policeman is at him in a minute. "Your papers!" demands the man of law. The beggar produces his documents. If it is proved that he has slept in the asylum for the homeless more than a certain number of nights he is forthwith conducted, willynilly, to the workhouse and made to labor for his board and lodging.

Now, the workhouse in Germany is not a prison, but the vagrant would as leave go to the one as to the other. The administration of the workhouse is conducted with iron severity. Every ounce of bread and every drop of thin soup consumed by the workhouse man is paid for a thousandfold by the sweat of his brow. So it comes about that the man least disposed to work, the born vagabond, finds it more agreeable to toil for his bread in the market than to fall into the hands of a paternal government.

Berlin takes advantage of the system in Germany which numbers and tickets every child born in the fatherland. No man can roam from district to district, changing his name and his life's story with every flitting. He is known to the police from the hour of his birth to the hour of his death. For a few pfennigs I can read the history of every person in Berlin. Therefore the municipality has an easy task. Every citizen's life story is known to them, and every vagrant is punished for his crime against the community.



Moreover, every person of humble means is insured by the state. Even clerks, shop assistants and servants are compelled to insure against sickness and against old age. This insurance is effected by the pasting into a book of certain stamps every week, and it is the duty of each employer to see that this contract is faithfully obeyed. And the state has at Beelitz an enormous sanitorium costing 10,000,000 marks (£500,000), where the invalided citizen is sent with his pension in order to expedite his valuable return to the ranks of the wage earners. It pays the city of Berlin to nurse its sick and cherish its invalids. The whole object of the municipality is to secure the physical and intellectual well being of its citizens, and on this task it concentrates its labors with amazing energy.

Berlin has a huge building resembling a factory where the unemployed, whole families, are received and provided for, for no one must take advantage of this hospitality more than five times in three months. Outside this period of grace if you are homeless five times a day you are induced to a workhouse. Private enterprise has produced a clever scheme whereby the homeless may come and have the privilege of [illegible] and [illegible] for a penny. [illegible] and [illegible] for a penny. [illegible] and [illegible] for a penny.

THE SWAYNE CASE.

HOW THE IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDING WILL BE CONDUCTED.

Nature of Charges Against the Florida Federal Judge and of His Defense—Impeachment Cases of the Past—The Trial Committees.

The impeachment of an official holding his position under the authority of the United States government is a rare occurrence. For this reason the proceedings instituted in congress against Charles Swayne, United States district judge for the northern district of Florida, have occasioned exceptional interest. Only three times in the history of the republic have federal judges been impeached. Such proceedings were instituted against Judge John Pickering of New Hampshire in 1803, and he was removed from office. In 1804 Judge Samuel Chase of Maryland, a member of the United States supreme court, was brought before the bar of the senate on impeachment proceedings, but it was shown they had a political animus, and the charges were not sustained. Judge Chase died as a member in good standing of the highest court of the land. The last federal judge to be impeached was Judge Peck of Missouri, and one of his prosecutors as a member of the house of representatives was James Buchanan, afterward president.

The impeachment proceedings in the case of President Johnson constituted a famous episode in the history of the country. But President Johnson was not removed from office. The last time the senate was called on to consider impeachment of a federal officer was in the case of General W. W. Belknap, who was secretary of war in the cabinet of President Grant. The impeachment proceedings failed, but he resigned his office.

Judge Swayne was extensively indorsed in 1897 for appointment to succeed Justice Stephen J. Field on the supreme bench of the United States. He was born at Guyencourt, New Castle county, Del., in 1842; was educated at the public schools and an academy and taught in a high school from 1864 to 1870. He graduated from the law department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1871 and was admitted to the bar the same year. He married in

JUDGE CHARLES SWAYNE.

1867 at West Grove, Pa., Miss Lydia C. Gawthrop. In 1885 he removed to Florida and was appointed a United States district judge in 1889.

The charges against Judge Swayne, briefly stated, include:

Nonresidence in the northern district of the state of Florida.

Unlawfully imposing a fine and imprisonment on E. T. Davis and S. T. Belden in 1901.

Unlawfully committing to prison in 1902 one O'Neal for alleged contempt of court.

Conduct unbecoming a judge in appointing one Tunison, in 1900, knowing him to be a man of bad character.

Refusing a fair hearing and trial to one Hoskins in 1902.

On behalf of Judge Swayne it is urged that there is no warrant for the charge of nonresidence and that even if it were true it would not warrant impeachment proceedings, that the other charges are flimsy and untruthful, that the whole proceeding has its origin in the personal resentment of one man upon whom Judge Swayne placed a jail sentence for contempt of court and that this man's influence fanned into flame the political animosity of Democrats toward Swayne on account of election prosecution during the strenuous times which marked his early incumbency of the federal judgeship.

By the constitution of the United States the house of representatives is given the sole power of impeachment, and the senate has the sole power to try all impeachments, the chief justice of the supreme court presiding in the case of the trial of a president. The case of Judge Swayne was presented before the bar of the senate soon after the opening of the present session of congress by a committee from the house of representatives, which, sitting as a grand jury, had previously passed a resolution accusing the judge of "high crimes and misdemeanors." The trial will take place before the senate in open session, and Judge Swayne will have an opportunity to prepare and present his defense. The committee of the house which will act as managers of the trial is composed of Palmer (Rep., Pa.), Gillett (Rep., Cal.), Parker (Rep., N. J.), Littlefield (Rep., Me.), Powers (Rep., Mass.), Clayton (Dem., Ala.) and De Armond (Dem., Mo.). The charges have been referred by the senate to a select committee composed of Platt (Rep., Conn.), Clark (Rep., Wyo.), Fairbanks (Rep., Ind.), Bacon (Dem., Ga.) and Pettus (Dem., Ala.).

A Comedian's Joke.

A celebrated Irish comedian went into a barber's shop to get shaved and, finding the barber out, he determined to have a little fun before his return. So he took off his coat, put on a thinner one and quietly waited for a customer. An old gentleman came in soon.

"Shave, sir?" said our pretended barber.

The old gentleman took a chair and the comedian began to lather, expecting every moment the barber would appear. Five minutes passed and no barber. Five more and still no barber.

The joker began to get desperate and conceived a bright idea. Putting up his brush he quickly changed his coat again, took his hat, and was about to quietly step out behind the gentleman's back when that worthy turned his head and exclaimed:

"Here, sir, aren't you going to shave me?"

"No, sir," promptly replied the comedian. "The fact is, we only lather here, sir. They shave four doors below."

Then he bolted out of the door, leaving the indignant old fellow to his wrath.

Gentle Hint to Restaurant Patrons.

The necessity of tipping with a lavish hand is strongly enforced in a restaurant near the station at Pompeii. In a prominent position is placed a gaudily framed sketch of the interior of the dining room, with two clients taking their departure. One of them, a cowed looking individual, is struggling into his overcoat, while two waiters stand near him, the one smiling derisively at the other, who displays a tiny coin with a gesture of fierce contempt. On the opposite side of the room a guest is seen surrounded by three waiters, one helping him with his coat, another brushing his hat, the third bowing obsequiously and holding his walking stick.

The moral is obvious, but allowance is made for the proverbial obtuseness of northern nations, and underneath the picture is inscribed in large letters, "The Results of Benevolence."—London Chronicle.

A Costly Comma.

A number of years ago when the United States by its congress was making a tariff bill one of the sections enumerated what articles should be admitted free of duty. Among the many articles specified were "all foreign fruit-plants," etc., meaning plants imported for transplanting, propagation or experiment. The enrolling clerk in copying the bill accidentally changed the hyphen in the compound word "fruit-plants" to a comma, making it read, "all foreign fruits, plants," etc. As a result of this simple mistake for a year, or until congress could remedy the blunder, all the oranges, lemons, bananas, grapes and other foreign fruits were admitted free of duty. This little mistake, which any one would be liable to make, yet could have avoided by carefulness, cost the government not less than $2,000,000. A pretty costly comma that.

A Widow's Charm.

There is nothing that need to perplex one in the secret of a widow's charm. She is simply saturated with wisdom of the particular kind needed in dealing with men. She has lived with one of the number, wintered and summered him and learned when to hold her tongue and when to be loquacious. She may be past mistress in the art of keeping out of the way until her society is very much wanted, and that is the acme of wisdom. There are times when every human being needs to be alone, to fight out the little ill tempers, shed the necessary tears or make repairs in one's personal appearance.—Detroit News.

Lacked the Lawyer's Facility.

Lawyer (to witness)—Never mind what you think. We want facts here. Tell us where you first met this man. Woman Witness—Can't answer it. If the court doesn't care to hear what I think there's no use questioning me, for I am not a lawyer and can't talk without thinking.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

Review of Reviews for January.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews for January, 1905, contains several features of exceptional interest. Dr. E. J. Dillon, the well-known British journalist and magazine writer, in a paper written from St. Petersburg, presents a graphic and searching analysis of the liberal progress in Russia, especially the zemstvo crisis. There is a series of three strong articles on Pittsburg as a new American great city. William Lucien Scaife writes on "Pittsburg's Basic Industry—Steel;" J. E. McKirdy describes the city as an industrial and commercial center, and Burd Shippen Patterson presents the ascetic and intellectual side of Pittsburg. The series is copiously illustrated with views, processes and protraits. The outlook for American labor in the coming year, as shown in a sketch of the personality and plans of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is given (with a portrait of Mr. Gompers) by Dr. Walter E. Weyl. Mr. Ernest Knaufft contributes an interpretative study, with pictures, of the comparative exhibition of American and European paintings recently held in New York, and there is a helpful informing article on transliteration from the Russian under the title "English Spelling of Russian Words," by Herman Rosenthal, of the New York Public Library. Austria proper and Bohemia are considered in the series of articles running in the Review of Reviews on what the people read in various countries. In this number there are also reproduced a number of Russian and Japanese popular war pictures, with explanatory text. Then there are the regular departments: "The Progress of the World," the "Record of Current Events," "Cartoons," "Leading Articles of the Month," "Briefer Notes on Topics in the Periodicals," and "Book Notices." This is a special fiction review number of the magazine, and in addition to the regular section devoted to noticing the serious books of the month, there are eight pages of novel reviewed, with many portraits and other illustrations.

"The District School," laughs for grandpa as well as the children, Stephens Opera house, Jan. 11th, benefit Public Library. Tickets, 35 cents and 50 cents.

Noah's Ark.

It was on Nov. 16, B. C. 2348, that Noah and the animals came out of the ark, according to Archbishop Ussher's chronology. Several experts have calculated that they had enjoyed ample accommodation in the ark. Sir Walter Raleigh computed that there were eighty-nine distinct species of beasts to be provided for, "or, lest any should be omitted, a hundred several kinds." He allowed that one elephant would want as much space as four beeves and one lion as two wolves, and found that there was room for 91, or, say, 120 beeves, 80 sheep and 64 wolves, which sufficed. One story or room would hold these, another their meat, a third the birds and their food, and still there was space for Noah and his family.

Raines Law to Be Amended.

A new Hotel bill will be introduced by Senator John Raines at the next session of the Legislature at Albany, to make easy a more strict enforcement of the Excise law.

"The Raines law," the Senator states, "like the tariff, will be amended by its friends and not by its enemies. The trouble is with its enforcement. With that end in view I propose to introduce at Albany a bill requiring saloonkeepers to get certificates from the building, health and fire departments, showing that they have complied with their regulations, before they can obtain a license.

"The Raines law is being constantly violated. So are the Ten Commandments. There is no need for repealing the law, what is needed is its enforcement."

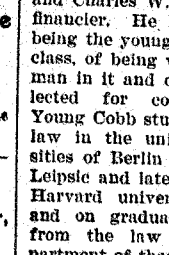
FAMOUS FOLK WHO ARE IN THE NEWS

GENERAL NAKAMURA.

WHEN the Japanese made their recent successful assaults on Two Hundred and Three Meter hill, the important position commanding the entire city and harbor of Port Arthur, a novel phase of one of the attacks was a charge by a specially trained body of swordsmen, descendants of the old samurai. They were led by Major General Nakamura, one of the most skillful swordsmen in the army of the mikado. The brave swordsmen were mowed down by hundreds as they dashed up the precipitous sides of the coveted hill. Shrapnel, hand grenades filled with dynamite and even stones were hurled down upon them by the determined Russian defenders, and the swordsmen who did not fall were finally driven back. General Nakamura was wounded in both legs, one of which was amputated later. The gallant charge of the swordsmen, failure as it was, paved the way for subsequent assaults which placed the hill in the hands of the Japanese. From it their naval and siege guns speedily sank or crippled the few Russian battleships and cruisers that were still afloat in the harbor.



In the days of the shogun the samurai, who were his fighting men, all carried swords and were adepts in their use, but when the shogunate was abolished in 1868 the wearing of such weapons was prohibited. Despite this fact the Japs did not abandon sword practice and are wonderfully skillful today.

William T. Cobb, elected governor of Maine by a large majority, is one of the foremost business men of his state. His family has been prominent in Maine politics for over forty years. His father, the late Francis Cobb, established the Cobb Lime company and other industries, was an intimate friend of James G. Blaine and a delegate to several national conventions of the Republican party. William T. Cobb was born at Rockland in 1857. He was a member of the class of '77 at Bowdoin college, a class which included Robert E. Peary, the explorer, and Charles W. Morse, the New York financier. He had the distinction of being the youngest member of a large class, of being voted the most popular man in it and of being one of ten selected for commencement honors. Young Cobb studied law in the universities of Berlin and Leipsic and later at Harvard university and on graduating from the law department of that institution entered the bar. But a business rather than a legal career lay before him. At thirty-three he succeeded on the death of his father to the management of most of the large concerns which the latter had established. Through his prudent and energetic policy the value of these interests has greatly increased. The lime company of which he is president has an output of over half a million casks of lime yearly and owns a fleet of thirty-five or forty vessels. He is president of one of the largest shipbuilding concerns in New England and is an officer in many banks and corporations. He is married and has two daughters and is known as a gentleman who combines the qualities of the student with those of the business man and public spirited citizen.

W. T. COBB.

Francis E. Leupp, who has been appointed commissioner of Indian affairs by President Roosevelt, has made a special study of matters pertaining to the wards of the government and has been visiting Indian reservations from time to time for the past eighteen years. It is said he is the first man appointed Indian commissioner in twenty years who has had experience with the Indians and the Indian service previous to taking up the duties of the office. Mr. Leupp's experience has been acquired in various ways. During President Cleveland's second administration he was a member of the board of Indian commissioners. Under different administrations he has helped to adjust difficulties that have arisen in connection with this service. Under Mr. Roosevelt he was delegated to make special investigations in several states and territories containing Indian reservations.

FRANCIS E. LEUPP.

Mr. Leupp is an author and newspaper correspondent. He was born in New York city in 1849, was graduated from Williams college in 1870 and from the Columbia Law school in 1872. He is the author of a character sketch of the president entitled "The Man Roosevelt." He has for some years represented the New York Evening Post at the capital and is one of the best known members of the Washington newspaper corps.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

The Hon. John Sharp Williams, leader of the minority in the house of representatives, probably has as large a fund of witty anecdotes as any man in congress, and he tells them very well. One day while leisurely driving down a road near his home town in Mississippi Mr. Williams observed a darky reclining under a tree near the roadside. The negro was gazing lazily up through the branches of the tree, and a hoe lay beside him. In the cornfield adjoining the road were many weeds.

"What are you doing there, Sam?" asked Mr. Williams.

"I's heah to hoe dat corn, sah," was the reply.

"Then what are you doing under the tree—resting?"

"Not exactly, sah; I ain't hardly restin', 'cause I ain't tired. I'm waitin' fo' de sun to go down, so I kin quit work."

Mr. Williams also tells of a friend who bought a pair of loud checked trousers. His negro valet envied him and wanted them. They did not seem to be coming his way fast enough, and he threw some grease on them.

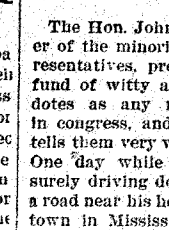
"Charley," said my friend, "take these trousers and clean them. There's a grease spot on them."

Charley took the trousers, didn't do a thing to them and brought them back in half a day.

"'Deed, boss," he said, "I can't get dat grease out."

"Did you scrub them well?"

"Yas, sah."



"Did you try a hot iron and a piece of brown paper?"

"Yas, sah."

"Did you try ammonia?"

"No, sah. I ain't done tried 'em on me yet, but I knows they'll fit me."

Lieutenant Granville R. Fortescue got knocked out in a boxing contest not long ago, but he has the satisfaction of knowing that it was no less a man than the president of the United States who dealt the blow which put him out. Mr. Roosevelt has taken to using the gloves a good deal recently, and when the young army officer, who is a cousin of Mrs. Roosevelt, called one day at the White House, he was invited to have a little bout with the president. They fell to punching each other good humoredly, but quite earnestly, and at last the chief magistrate of the nation landed a stiff right hander squarely on his opponent's left cheek which knocked him down and out and left a small discoloration under his eye to remind him of the honor of such a defeat.

LIEUTENANT FORTESCUE.

Persons who think that the life of an ambassador of the United States to a foreign country is necessarily one of luxury and ease have a mistaken idea. Joseph H. Choate, who, according to report, will soon be recalled as American ambassador to the court of St. James, is said to be such a hard worker that he often goes to his desk before 8 o'clock in the morning, though the office hours are not supposed to begin until 11. He finds a large mass of correspondence awaiting him and opens every letter personally. He is closely occupied until 1 o'clock, when he takes a brief half hour for luncheon, and though the office closes at 3 he rarely leaves it before 5. Sometimes he works until well into the evening. His engagements at dinners and other social functions constitute, of course, an important part of his work. With so much to do the ambassador cannot afford to waste time.

JOSEPH H. CHOATE.

Mr. Choate is famous for aptness at repartee. They are still telling in England the story of how Bishop W.'s nephew went to see Mr. Choate one day when he was very busy.

"Take a chair," said Mr. Choate.

The young visitor was very impatient. He exclaimed:

"But I'm Bishop W.'s nephew."

"Take two chairs," said Mr. Choate.

In conducting the suit of Hunt, the great architect, against Mrs. Paran Stevens Mr. Choate dwelt upon her humble origin and her successive rises in the social world, concluding with: "At last the arm of royalty was bent to receive her gloved hand, and how, gentlemen of the jury, did she reach this imposing eminence? (Pause.) Upon a mountain of unpaid bills."

Representative Hay of Virginia tells of an altercation in a colored club in Richmond that resulted in nearly all the members being haled before a police magistrate, says Collier's Weekly.

"You were present during this trouble?" asked the magistrate of a witness.

"Yes, yo' honah."

"Then tell us, in a few words, just how the difficulty began."

"Well, yo' honah," replied the darky with much gravity, "I think it was when de chairman of de entertainment committee swatted de secretary ovah de head wif de lovin' cup."

A NEW SANTA CLAUS

HE IS THE MAIL CARRIER OF THE RURAL FREE DELIVERY SYSTEM.

Uncle Sam's Messenger Makes a Good Substitute For the Venerable St. Nicholas—His Arduous Holiday Labors.

In the city Santa Claus no longer comes down the chimney because in so many houses and apartments old fashioned fireplaces and stoves have given place to steam radiators and similar heating arrangements. How could Santa Claus, with all his bundles, manage to travel through steam pipes and burst through a radiator?

In the country they still have stoves and chimney holes and sometimes open fireplaces, but in the delivery of Christmas presents Santa Claus, who is getting rather infirm, has found an excellent substitute for himself in the rural carrier who is paid by Uncle Sam to collect and distribute all kinds of matter that may be sent with postage stamps.

In the establishment of the rural free delivery Uncle Sam greatly facilitated the work of Santa Claus, for the mail carriers are generally young and husky fellows who can carry on their backs or in their wagons loads that might well stagger the old gentleman who has been accustomed to distribute the presents to the young folks. Under the modern system the Christmas remembrances come in neat packages all properly stamped and addressed instead of being left in stockings or by the stove or fireplace. But when the packages are opened the gifts look just as pleasing as ever.

Sometimes they come in reply to letters sent by the farmers and their wives, and in this case the mail carrier may in the first place have issued money orders or registered letters in order to assure safe conveyance of the money or its equivalent. Orders for presents can be sent by mail and selections be made by catalogue. In this case the substitutes for Santa Claus both take the orders and deliver the goods. Then there are the packages that come to the farmers' children from their city cousins. The rural mail carrier often brings them too. He comes to be a very popular character in one way and another around holiday time. The young people await his daily rounds with eager expectation and inspect his well filled and often overloaded vehicle with ill concealed curiosity.

THE R. F. D. CARRIER DISTRIBUTING MAIL.

Both at Christmas time and at other seasons the rural mail carrier has come to be the bearer of a great many small packages besides the letters and newspapers which are ordinarily supposed to form the bulk of his burden. To afford greater accommodation to the public, the postmaster general at Washington, Robert J. Wynne, has recommended to congress that a rate of 3 cents per pound, or any fractional part thereof, be fixed for packages not exceeding five pounds mailed at the distributing postoffice of any rural free delivery route for delivery to patrons on that route only.

The postmaster general says:

"With the establishment of rural mail delivery and the increasing extension of rural telephone service by private interests there has grown up a demand by the patrons of the rural service for the delivery of small packages of merchandise, such as foodstuffs, tobacco, dry goods, drugs, etc., on an order to the local merchant by postal card, telephone or otherwise. The value of these packages of merchandise is usually small, and the present rate of postage of a cent per ounce is practically prohibitive. The patron or merchant cannot afford to pay 16 cents for the delivery of a pound of coffee or tobacco, or similar article, but if a special rate were established on such matter from the distributing office for delivery to any patron on the rural routes from that office it would be a great convenience to the patrons and become a source of revenue to the department."

The large extent of the business the postal department does through the rural mail carriers not only at Christmas time, but at other seasons of the year, is shown in the fact that the number of pieces of mail delivered on rural routes throughout the United States in the past fiscal year aggregated 906,224,121. The number of pieces of mail collected was 133,063,351. The pay of the carriers for the year reached a sum in excess of $12,000,000. But the pay of an individual carrier is not munificent. The farmers know this, and at holiday time they extend to him the compliments of the season in gifts of vegetables and fruit and other products of the farm.

First Book Auction.

Speaking of auctions and auctioneers, a book dealer says: "The first book auction in England of which we have any record is of a date as far back as 1676, when the library of Dr. Seaman was brought to the hammer. Prefixed to the catalogue there is an address which thus begins: 'Reader, it hath not been usual here in England to make sale of books by way of auction, or who will give the most for them; but, it having been practiced in other countries to the advantage of both buyers and sellers, it was therefore conceived (for the encouragement of learning) to publish the sale of these books in this manner of way.'"

When London Is Silent.

When a very dense fog settled over the Thames valley a few Sundays ago and most densely over London it imposed a complete silence on animal life. London was itself as silent as the grave, for all traffic was stopped, and, as on Sunday traffic of any kind is reduced to a minimum, the great city was almost as still as a country village at midnight. The streets and even the river were almost without a sound, for not a single tug was moving on the Thames. In the country no bird uttered a sound. They all sat still, silent and moping.

Looking Glasses In Coffins.

One of the ancient customs connected with Swedish funerals was to place a small looking glass in the coffin of an unmarried female, so that when the last trump sounds she might be able to arrange her tresses. It was the practice for Scandinavian maidens to wear their hair flowing loosely, while the matrons wore it bound about the head and generally covered with some form of cap; hence the unmarried woman was imagined as awakening at the judgment day with more untidy locks than her wedded sisters and more in need of a glass.—Westminster Review.

The Ladder of Life.

All the events of a life are necessary to a higher development. The common task is a round by which we climb to glorious achievement. The ladder which leads us to perfection is made up of small events and small victories. In the economy of life nothing is useless and nothing is wasted. Everything in its place is the best thing for that place. Life is a law, not an accident. —A. J. C. Norris.

Forestry Reserves.

The first forestry reserves were made for the general object of preserving the forest and without specific relation to the great problem for which later they were to provide the only solution. Now they are seen to stand at the center of public land policy of the nation, for out of them come the wood and the water and the grass which are indispensable for the founding of homes.—Gifford Pinchot.

Head About to Burst From Severe Bilious Attack.

"I had a severe bilious attack and felt like my head was about to burst, when I got hold of a free sample of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. I took a dose of them after supper and the next day felt like a new man and have been feeling happy ever since," says J. W. Smith of Juliff, Texas. For billiousness, stomach troubles and constipation these tablets have no equal. Price 25 cents for sale by H. C. Giesler.

Licked Into Shape.

The phrase "licked into shape" owes its origin to a very ancient fable. In Bailey's "Ovid's Metamorphoses," fable 33 has this heading: "Bears bring forth a lump of flesh and by licking reduce it to a proper shape." This tradition that the cubs of bears are cast shapeless and remain so till the dam has licked them into proper form is emphasized in Pope's "Dunciad:"

So watchful bruin forms, with plastic care,
Each growing lump and brings it to a bear.

In Shakespeare, too, "King Henry VI.," part 3, act 3, section 2, we find:

Like to a chaos, or an unlicked bear whelp,
That carries no impression like the dam.

RECTOR OF ST. LUKE'S,

Ashburnham, Ontario, Testifies to the Good Qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Ashburnham, Ont., April 18, 1903.—I think that it is only right that I should tell you what a wonderful effect Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has produced. The day before Easter I was so distressed with a cold and cough that I did not think to be able to take any duties the next day, as my voice was almost choked by the cough. The same day I received an order from you for a bottle of your Cough Remedy. I at once procured a sample bottle, and took about three doses of the medicine. To my great relief the cough and cold had completely disappeared and I was able to preach three times on Easter day. I know that this rapid and effective cure was due to Cough Remedy. I make this testimony, without solicitation, being thankful to have found such a God-sent remedy. Respectfully yours,

The Art of Eating.

Eating is the first thing we learn to do and the last thing we learn to do right. Some never learn it at all and end their lives and their happiness through the neglect. As it consumes much of our time and must always do so it is a duty to make it an adequate source of pleasure. It is something which all may appreciate, and so has much to do with democratizing pleasure. As long as pleasure is confined to the higher—to music, literature or contemplation—it must be limited and be the privilege of a few who can have the required culture. It is important to secure enjoyments which all men may have and not depreciate the capacity of the poor or low. That there may be much happiness it must be in the many, and these can have only a simple happiness. The good things of life must be found in the common acts in the elementary things which are necessary to life itself or which every one will occasionally have. To disparage "physical" enjoyments—though all enjoyments are such—is to try to limit enjoyment to the rich or the educated.—Boston Cooking School Magazine.

PROFIT

The matter of feed is of tremendous importance to the farmer. Wrong feeding is loss. Right feeding is profit.

The up-to-dat farmer knows what to feed his cows to get the most milk, his pigs to get the most pork, his hens to get the most eggs. Science.

But how about the children? Are they fed according to science? Does a bone food if bones be soft and undeveloped, a blood and muscle food if they are thin and weak and a blood food if there is anemia?

Scott's Emulsion is a mixed food; the Cod Liver Oil in it makes flesh, blood and muscle, the Lime and Soda make bone and brain. It is the standard scientific food for delicate children.

Final preparations are being made for the "Mock Trial" that takes place Friday evening of this week. The young men are arranging for a number of recitations and three of the members of the club will render vocal selections. This preliminary concert will be followed by the mock trial "The Great Libel Case" by twenty-one young men, making practically two entertainments in one evening, for one admission price. The doors open at 7:30 p. m. and the entertainment begins at 8 p. m. The president of the club will present an Ingersoll watch to the boy that has sold the most tickets up to 7 o'clock that evening. By buying your tickets in advance you help some boy get this useful gift. If Friday evening proves stormy the entertainment will be repeated and all unused tickets still will admit you.

PAINFULLY SEDATE.

A Professor's Evening Party in the Paris Latin Quarter.

"It was difficult to imagine that I was in the heart of Paris, among people bred and born in the capital," says a writer telling of the section of the Latin quarter in which the professors of the University of Paris have their homes. "These men, these luminaries of science, how different they looked among their womankind! Since then I have visited many professors' homes and have found them all curiously alike. No matter whether the apartment be on a second, third or fourth floor, whether it be an expensive or cheap one, the inmates are all alike, talk alike, dress alike. If you have seen one home, you have seen them all. Follow me to a fourth floor in the Rue Gay-Lussac. We are ushered into the drawing room. The furniture is mahogany, always mahogany, and of a bad period. There are no flowers, but a dusty fern in a majolica pot; on the mantelpiece a clock and a candelabra, with framed photographs in the spaces between; over the cottage piano the portrait of M. le Professeur in the green embroidered uniform of a member of the Academy of Science, with his dress sword, over which he generally stumbles. But do not think that the professors' families are blind to beauty. They will admire and appreciate a work of art as well as you or I, but in their homes they consider beauty a negligible quantity. They also give very little attention to their bodies—to the inner or outer man. I have often wondered whether the same tailor supplies them all with their old fashioned coats.

"Nor does the inner man fare much better. The cooks in their establishments seem to be altogether different creatures from those we meet elsewhere. They eschew slang, their grammar is better, but their cooking is worse—very much worse—than in the homes of the less intellectual members of society. The women form a distinct type. They seem to belong to a past generation, and their dress is in keeping with the style of their hair. Living among themselves, they appear to have no notion of what is occurring in the worldly part of Paris. Their dressmakers are 'of the quarter,' and their milliners make their hats with the odds and ends brought to them. Such a thing as a fashion paper never crosses their path. I am certain these ladies are much more interested in the latest microbe than in the latest hat. They have little notion of comfort.

"An evening party at one of their houses is a never to be forgotten entertainment for the outsider. They still dance the schottish, but the greater part of the evening is devoted to what are called 'society games,' a gaping trap to the butterfly from across the Seine. I have forgotten the name of the fiendish game, but I recall that we were all seated in a ring—about thirty of us—old and young, and we had to answer questions and find out some antediluvian fact. To them it was child's play, but if it had not been for the six-year-old child of the house who prompted me I should have cut a poor figure. Imagine coming from the electric lights of the boulevards to the oil lamps of the professors' salon and being suddenly called upon to know that Dalmatia was conquered by Metellus in 118 B. C.! Delightful evening!"

A TALE OF BONANZA DAYS.

How a Chance Remark of James Flood Ruined His Gardener.

In the old days of excitement when mining stocks were on the jump and men became millionaires over one day's dabbling an incident occurred at the country residence of James C. Flood in Menlo when a fairly well to do farmer found himself without a home in the short period of one week. The man's name was Hank, and, being a first class gardener, he readily found employment about the residence of the wealthy owners of mansions. In this way he was employed at the Flood residence. Hank was loitering about the garden one Saturday evening as the proprietor, in company with a visitor, was looking over the stock.

Mr. Flood, who had just stepped out of the hog corral, casually remarked to his friend that he would be willing to make a bet that "Con would go up to 800 before Christmas." Hank construed "Con" to mean Consolidated Virginia, and, taking the tip which he thought would make him a millionaire, he disposed of his holdings of 250 acres of fine land, his stock and, in brief, everything he had on earth except his wife and four bright little Hanks. The proceeds he invested in Consolidated Virginia stock, which was then selling at $75 a share.

Christmas came, but instead of "Con" going up to $300 it fell to $25. The man was a pauper. In lamenting his loss he incidentally mentioned to a friend of Flood how he lost his all. Flood, who was generous to a fault, sent for Hank and had him repeat his story. When he learned of his chance remark about "Con going up to 300 before Christmas" he fairly shook with laughter and explained what it meant.

It was in reference to the gift of a young sow, made a present to him by Con O'Connor, who in the fun of the thing had called the pig Con. The bet alluded to the sow's increasing in weight to 300 pounds before Christmas and not to Con Virginia.

Having enjoyed the joke and after joshing Hank, the noble hearted Flood bought back the ranch for Hank and recompensed him for all his losses. The originality of the joke and the knowledge of the penalty paid by an eavesdropper were Flood's reward.—San Francisco Call.

C. S. MELLEN'S CAREER.

Railroad Man Whose Views President Roosevelt Indorsed.

In his recent message to congress President Roosevelt in discussing the labor problem quoted from a "speech delivered some time ago by the president of one of our great railroad systems" and indorsed the "common sense" character of his views. He did not mention the name of the railroad official, but it transpires that he is Charles S. Mellen, president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, and that the address in question was delivered about a year ago before the Hartford (Conn.) board of trade. It discussed the need of forbearance on the part of the employer and employee. When Mr. Mellen as a boy of fifteen obtained a position in the office of the cashier of the Northern New Hampshire railroad at Concord his interest in the railroad went beyond the routine duties with which he was at first intrusted.

He did not dream then of the days to come when salaries of $40,000 to $50,000 a year would be at his command, but railroad problems interested him so much and he applied himself so diligently to his work that better positions soon came to him. At thirty-seven he was drawing $15,000 a year as traffic manager of the Union Pacific. In 1897 he was chosen president of the Northern Pacific and left that road a year ago to assume his present duties.

TRYING TO DIE POOR.

Andrew Carnegie's Ambition and His Immense Income.

The now famous female exponent of "frenzied finance," Mrs. Cassie L. Chadwick, has dragged the name of the multimillionaire philanthropist, Andrew Carnegie, into undesirable publicity by raising money on notes bearing his signature, but which he says he never signed. The canny Scotchman is said to have remarked that the fact that bankers loaned money on the notes without looking into the question of their genuineness was at least a tribute to his financial credit. He has not given any notes in many years.

When Mr. Carnegie was born sixty-seven years ago in a little one story cottage in Dunfermline, Scotland, near the old abbey church where repose the remains of King Robert Bruce, his parents little thought he would have to work hard as an old man at giving away money in order to die poor. Not long ago his wealth was estimated at

ANDREW CARNEGIE IN HIS LIBRARY.

$250,000,000. It is said he has given away $100,000,000 and still is encumbered with an income of some $14,000,000. He believes in sports and recreations and declares that the greatest game of all is golf.

Mr. Carnegie is fond of the theater. When he was fourteen years old and a telegraph messenger he used to deliver messages to a theater manager, and it was the custom to take the telegrams on the stage behind the scenes if the play had begun. The ironmaster says he was always careful to arrive after the performance was under way so he could see the show.

OLD AND NEW COINS.

Interesting Facts About Coinage at the Different Mints.

The director of the mint is called on to answer such a wide range of questions concerning the values of old and new coins and medals that he has found it necessary to issue circulars covering matters of this sort. They tell some interesting facts. It appears that the mint does not buy old coins or paper money except some rare colonial coins in fine condition, which are desired for the mint cabinet. Mutilated or uncurrent United States gold and silver coin is purchased as bullion. The mint has no pattern pieces for sale. The government pays no premium for the return of any of its coins or paper money. New coins cannot be struck until authorized by an act of congress. The mint supplies United States coins only and not of any past date. The fifty dollar goldpiece and the half dollar and quarter dollar pieces in gold were struck by private parties on the California coast during the 1849 period and not by the United States government.

The coinage of the following coins ceased in the years named: Half and 1 cent, copper, in 1857; 1 cent, nickel, 1864; half dime and 3 cents, silver, and 2 cents, bronze, in 1873; 20 cents, silver, 1878; trade dollars, 1883; $1 and $3, gold, and 3 cents, nickel, 1889. The Columbian half dollar was coined in 1892 and the Isabella quarter in 1893. The Lafayette dollar was struck in 1899, the date on the coin (1900) being that of the unveiling of the memorial.

There are certain markings on every United States coin that enable the place of its coinage to be located. Those struck at the Philadelphia mint have no mint mark, but those struck at all other mints are distinguished by a small letter on the reverse, near the bottom. These letters are C for Charlotte, N. C., discontinued in 1861; CC for Carson City, Nev., discontinued in 1893; D for Dahlonega, Ga., discontinued in 1861; O for New Orleans and S for San Francisco. The coins of the United States now authorized by law are: In gold, double eagle, eagle, half eagle, quarter eagle; in silver, half dollar, quarter dollar and dime; minor, 5 cent, nickel, and 1 cent, bronze. A person may buy a proof set of gold coins from the mint for $38.50 and a proof set of silver and minor coins for $1.50. When the business of the mints is slack medals may be struck from dies furnished by individuals, public institutions and incorporated societies at a charge sufficient to cover the cost of the operation and the value of the metal.—Brooklyn Eagle.

WHY DON'T YOU?

Why don't you answer your friend's letter at once?

Why don't you make the promised visit to that invalid? She is looking for you day after day.

Why don't you send away that little gift you've been planning to send? Mere kind intentions never accomplish any good.

Why don't you try to share the burden of that sorrowful one who works beside you? Is it because you are growing selfish?

Why don't you speak out the encouraging words that you have in your thoughts? Unless you express them they are of no use to others.

Why don't you take more pains to be self sacrificing and loving in the everyday home life? Time is rapidly passing. Your dear ones will not be with you always.

Why don't you create around you an atmosphere of happiness and helpfulness so that all who come in touch with you may be made better? Is not this possible?—Class Mate.

Early Tobacco.

According to John Aubery, who wrote a celebrated work on "the very queere Indian weede," there was a time when tobacco was worth its weight in silver. Among other things Aubery says: "Sir Walter Raleigh was the first that brought tobacco into England, and in our parts—North Wilts—it came in fashion through Sir Walter Long. They used silver pipes, but the commoners used a walnut shell. It was sold then for its weight in silver. I have heard some of your old yeomen neighbors say that when they went to Chippenham to market they always culled out their shillings to lay in the scales against the tobacco. Now the customers of it are among the greatest that his majesty hath."

How Fulgurites Form.

A fulgurite is formed by a bolt of lightning. A geologist gives this explanation: "When a bolt of lightning strikes a bed of sand it plunges downward into the sand for a distance less or greater, transforming simultaneously into glass the silica in the material through which it passes. Thus by its great heat it forms at once a glass tube of precisely its own size. Now and then such a tube is found and dug up. Fulgurites have been followed into the sand by excavations for nearly thirty feet. They vary in interior diameter from the size of a quill to three inches or more, according to the bore of the flash."

The Vastness of Texas.

This will help you to figure out just how large Texas really is. If you have a star mathematician in your family tell him the number of square miles there are in the big state, then tell him the population of the globe; then ask him if all the people in the world were placed in Texas and its soil divided out among them per capita how large would the man's farm be who had a wife and two children? When he gets through figuring, then whisper in his ear, "More than half an acre."—Texarkana (Tex.) Courier.

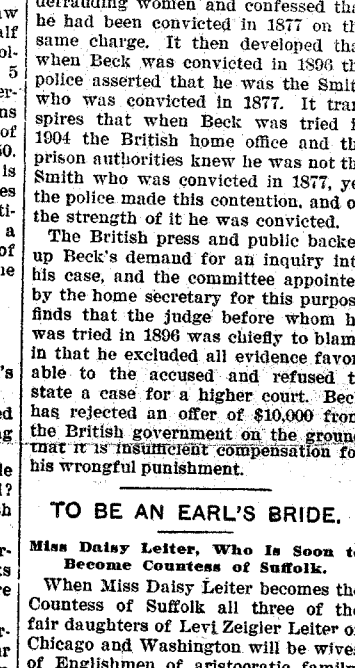
MISTAKEN IDENTITY.

Strange Case of Adolf Beck, Who Was Punished For Another.

The case of Adolph Beck, which has recently aroused much interest in England, resembles that of Mrs. Florence Maybrick in being an example of miscarriage of justice. Beck's case differs from Mrs. Maybrick's, however, in that it is one of mistaken identity.

Beck was charged with obtaining money and jewels from women under false pretenses. On the evidence of women who identified him he was convicted of the charge. That was in

ADOLF BECK.



1896. He served out his sentence of five years and shortly after his release was again arrested on charges like those made before and was again convicted, but afterward it was discovered that both his convictions were founded on mistaken identity, and he was granted a "free pardon." Beck was punished for crimes committed by William Thomas, alias John Smith. A year after his first conviction and sentence a man giving the name of John Smith was arrested on the charge of defrauding women and confessed that he had been convicted in 1877 on the same charge. It then developed that when Beck was convicted in 1896 the police asserted that he was the Smith who was convicted in 1877. It transpires that when Beck was tried in 1904 the British home office and the prison authorities knew he was not the Smith who was convicted in 1877, yet the police made this contention, and on the strength of it he was convicted.

The British press and public backed up Beck's demand for an inquiry into his case, and the committee appointed by the home secretary for this purpose finds that the judge before whom he was tried in 1896 was chiefly to blame in that he excluded all evidence favorable to the accused and refused to state a case for a higher court. Beck has rejected an offer of $10,000 from the British government on the ground that it is insufficient compensation for his wrongful punishment.

MISS DAISY LEITER.

nounced. The Earl of Suffolk, like Major Campbell, is aid-de-camp to the viceroy, so that the latter will soon have two brothers-in-law on his staff.

Miss Daisy Leiter met the Earl of Suffolk when she and her sister Nancy visited Lady Curzon in 1898 at the vice regal court in India. The earl was born in 1877 and succeeded to his title in 1898, and his baptismal name is Henry Molyneux Paget Howard. His relations with his future brother-in-law became strained some time ago because within hearing of Lord Curzon he referred to him as "the old bounder." The earl is quite a sportsman, owns 10,000 acres and has a famous picture gallery in Charlton park, his ancestral home in England.

DESIGNING A HEAD.

An Interesting Tonsorial Operation by the Famous Whistler.

"Amazing!" the favorite ejaculation of the brilliant and eccentric artist, James MacNeill Whistler, is the word which seems best to fit the curious combination of personal peculiarities—mischievous wit, tricksy jests, gay quarrels, harmless vanities and remarkable artistic performance—revealed in Mr. Mortimer Menpes' recent recollections of his "Master." The eccentricities of Whistler's character were matched by those of his appearance, for he never dressed like anybody else, and he had, just over his left eye, a single lock of white hair amid a mass of black curls. His own interest in his appearance was great, for he regarded the composition of costume and coiffure with the same seriousness which he would have bestowed upon the composition of a picture, and indeed the result was unmistakably picturesque.

"Customers ceased to be interested in their own hair," says Mr. Menpes of Whistler's entrance into a barber's shop. "Operators stopped their manipulations; every one turned to watch Whistler, who himself was supremely unconscious. His hair was first trimmed, but left rather long, Whistler meanwhile directing the cutting of every lock as he watched the barber in the glass. He, poor fellow, only too conscious of the delicacy of his task, shook and trembled as he manipulated the scissors. The clipping completed, Whistler waved the operators imperiously on one side, and we observed for some time the rear view of his dapper little figure, stepping backward and forward, surveying himself in the glass. Suddenly he put his head into a basin of water, and then, half drying his hair, shook it into matted wet curls. With a comb he carefully picked out the white lock, wrapped it in a towel and walked about for five minutes, pinching it dry, with the rest of his hair hanging over his face—a stage which much amused the onlookers.

"Still pinching the towel, he would then beat the rest of his hair into ringlets (combing would not have given them the right quality) until they fell into decorative waves all over his head. A loud scream would then rend the air. Whistler wanted a comb. This procured, he would comb the white lock into a feathery plume and with a few broad movements of his hand form the whole into a picture. Then he would look beamingly at himself in the glass and say but two words, 'Menpes, amazing!' and sail triumphantly out of the shop."

The Lease of Life.

It is the inevitable law of nature that we must die. The vital energy that is implanted in the body at birth is only meant to sustain it for a certain number of years. It may be husbanded or wasted, made to burn slowly or rapidly. It is like the oil in a lamp and may be burned out to little effect in a little time or carefully husbanded and preserved and thus made to last longer and burn brighter.

It is a moot question whether every individual is not at birth gifted with the same amount of vital energy and of life sustaining power. The probability is that each is. The circumstances of the environment from the cradle to the grave determine its future destiny.—Gentleman's Magazine.

OWNERS OF WATER POWER

Upper and Lower Dam Contention—Advisory Board at Albany Hears Argument and and An Adjournment Is Taken.

The manufacturing and commercial interests of this city are deeply interested in the proposed construction of the Barge Canal and the contemplated improvement of the water-power in the Oswego River. A very intelligible and comprehensive explanation of the plans executed by the resident engineer, Mr. Cushman, was recently given before the Chamber of Commerce by Mr. George G. Chauncey, who had made a close study of the project.

The engineer's plans contemplated the raising of the upper dam six and one-half feet and the lower dam three feet, and a conference was held in Albany last Wednesday before the Barge Canal Advisory Board and committees which represented the upper and lower dam interests of Fulton. Messrs. F. E. Weeden, F. G. Weeks and H. L. Paddock were present, and were represented by the Hon. N. N. Stranahan, who stated that the gentlemen he represented were not opposed to the raising of the upper dam the required height, but wished to register an objection to the raising of the lower dam three feet. The contention being that the former would suffer from water backed into their wheels.

Those who represented the lower dam were Messrs. Thomas Hunter, F. B. Ditts, F. A. Gage, J. H. Howe, L. W. Emerick, G. B. Wells, J. A. [illegible] and G. G. Chauncey.

Mr. Chauncey, in behalf of the lower dam interest, argued against any change in the engineer's plans, and in defence of his position asked the engineers many pertinent questions. He pointed out the necessity of a greater depth of water in the river between the two dams. During the boating season, Mr. Chauncey said, the pulp mills on the west side of the river above the lower dam would boat about 7,000 cords of wood, while the mills on the east side would boat about 15,000 tons of coal. At the present level of water there was constant danger of boats running aground, causing the mills inconvenience and loss by shutting down in order to float the vessels. These facts furnished indubitable proof of the necessity for greater capacity or flow of water between the two dams.

The upper dam representatives then asserted that if their contention was not tenable it would be satisfactory to them to have the dams remain as they are for the present, and on their motion an adjournment was taken until Jan. 18

It is the opinion of those who are competent to judge that the action of the upper dam representatives may greatly delay the letting of contracts for canal improvement.

The manufacturers at the lower dam, which almost entirely represents local capital, are loud in their praises of Engineer Cushman, who enjoys a wide reputation as a skillful engineer, and who has tried to conserve the best interests of all in the plans he has submitted to Albany. To emphasize this fact the following resolution was unanimously adopted at a recent meeting:

Resolved, That it is the concensus of opinion of the manufacturers drawing water from the lower dam at Fulton that the barge canal should be constructed through the city of Fulton according to the plans drawn by the resident engineers.

A Memorable Event.

Members of the Twentieth Century Embroidery club of Syracuse were entertained on Wednesday of last week by Mrs. Fred J. Hitchcock and Mrs. Hal A. McFarland at the home of Mrs. McFarland in Oneida street in honor of the birthday anniversaries of the parents of Mrs. Hitchcock and Mr. McFarland, Mr. and and Mrs. Albert C. McFarland. Upon that date Mr. McFarland reached his 67th milestone and his wife her 61st. The events were fittingly observed in a joint celebration and the visitors presented Mrs. McFarland with a beautifully engraved silver desert spoon.

The Syracusans present were Mrs. Adelbert Snow, Mrs. Fred Dungey, Mrs. Fred Flower, Mrs. Helen Wicks, Mrs. Wallace Sherwood, Mrs. Cameron and Mrs. Andrew Murray. Mrs. A. C. McFarland was formerly a member of the Twentieth Century Embroidery club when a resident of Syracuse.

City Engineer Appointed.

Mr. Joseph H. Young was appointed city engineer by the Board of Public Works at a meeting last Saturday evening. Mr. Young has been in the employ of the State for several years. In addition he has had twelve years' experience on street and railroad construction, principally in the city of Boston. In a recent competitive examination before the Civil Service Board, Mr. Young's rating was 100 per cent. The Board feels that it is fortunate in securing his services.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB

Discussion of Foreign and Domestic Happenings in a Most Interesting Manner.

The Current Events Club met on Tuesday evening, Dec. 27, at the home of Mrs G. S. Piper. Mr. E. R. Redhead presided. In the absense of the secretary, the president asked Rev. S. D. Robinson to act as secretary for the meeting. The minutes of the meeting of Dec. 12 were read and approved. The question of reducing the limit of membership of the club to forty was discussed. It was decided that at the next meeting—January 9—the roll of members should be called and the by-laws should then be applied which provides that any member absent from three consecutive meetings of the club, without a valid excuse, surrenders his membership.

The program of the evening was in charge of Mr. G B Duell and Mr. A. J. Snow. Rev. A. J. Grant gave a very instructive address on "The National Civic Federation." He spoke of the origin of of the Federation, its aims, plans of work, the work accomplished, and the personnel of the organization. Mr. Grant said that the aim of the Federation was the application of reason and fairness, instead of greed and brute force, to the problems between labor and capital; that it seeks to do, in the disturbances, real or threatened, between labor and capital what the Hague aims to do in the settlement of difficulties between nations.

Rev. John Richards read, without comment, two clippings from the press, one reported Dr. Lymon Abbott as having declared that he did not believe in a Great First Cause. The other was the report of a speech made by Rev Dr. Calthrop of Syracuse, in which he believed the doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church concerning purgatory.

Mr. G. B Duell spoke briefly and in a very interesting manner of New York City subway franchises, public ownership of transportation facilities, the Smoot inquiry, Lawson of "Frenzied Finance" and the Standard Oil Company, the reported negotiation for the sale of the Lake Side Street Railway, an action brought by a rejected suitor to recover damages for loss of time spent in courting, the proposal to build a 2,000 mile pipe line from Indian Territory to New York City, the final farewell of Mme Patti at St. Petersburg, and the death of J. Clark Davis of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, Paul Kruger of South Africa and John Dunlop of Syracuse, N. Y.

[illegible] the Czar, the reform aims of the new Minister of the Interior and the situation at Port Arthur.

Mrs. H. J. Wilson, taking the announcement of the engagement of Miss Leiter to the Earl of Suffolk, treated in a very happy manner the effect which international marriages have upon international affairs.

Mr. A. J. Snow spoke of the mission of Secretary Taft to Panama as a peace-maker. Complications had arisen on the Isthmus because the people of the canal zone had built about that zone a three-rail-tariff fence which practically excluded the products of Panama from that zone. At the same time American products were admitted almost free. Secretary Taft assured the Panamans that the United States had gone to the Isthmus for the sole purpose of digging the canal. He took down one rail of the three-rail fence; that is, he reduced the tariff from 15 to 10 per cent., and so accomplished a difficult task. Mr. Snow stated that Chief Engineer Wallace of the Isthmian Canal Commission, had declared himself in favor of a canal at sea level.

The next meeting will be held on Monday evening, Jan. 9, at the home of Mrs. Thomas Hunter. The leaders will be Mr. E R. Redhead and Mrs. Helen Emens.

On account of the inclemency of the evening and the number of club members who were out of town, the roll call for membership in the Current Events club was not made on Tuesday evening of last week, at the home of Attorney and Mrs. Piper as expected. The roll call will be made at the home of Mrs. Thomas Hunter on Monday evening, when all who desire to retain membership should be present and respond to their names.

Regarding The Trains for "A Trip To Egypt" At Oswego, Tuesday.

Trains that have been run in the past for attractions at Oswego, have caused the management of the Richardson Theatre, to lose money on them, on account of patrons from Fulton, using regular trains down, instead of the train that the Richardson Theatre management has guaranteed and has to pay for. Hereafter for special trains that are provided, round trip tickets will be placed on sale at Watson's Drug store, at 50 cents each, and it is earnestly hoped that Fulton patrons will use the special train down, and by so doing save the extra fare which it will cost them returning from Oswego, as those not holding tickets will be charged 75 cents returning instead of [illegible] which is the special train [illegible]

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 4, 1905.

It is said there were more gifted people in the United States on the 25th of December, 1904, than at any time in the history of the country.

The White House Christmas turkey shipped as usual in cold storage seems to have escaped the attention of the Boston correspondent this time.

In casting about for the secret of Mrs. Chadwick's success with usually cautious financiers, someone has found it in the psychology of her clothes.

The Samar tribes in the Philippines seem to be unaware that the war is over or that they have been benevolently assimilated.

News from Madrid indicates that the Spanish women are engaged in a riot. It appears that bargain counters abound also at the Spanish capitol.

The suggestions of Mr Garfield that the trusts shall take out a license, appears to be quite superfluous. The general opinion is that the trusts already have unlimited license.

Andrew White recently Ambassador to Germany, has discovered that American politics are impure. The discovery is not original and the question of the purification is doubtless beyond the wit of Government chemists.

President Roosevelt has determined to devote as much time as possible to recreation and rest during the holiday recess. The strain of talking to thousands of people on a great variety of important subjects and on subjects of importance only to the callers, is telling mentally and physically on the President. Cabinet meetings will be held as usual, but will probably be of a routine character. Only business of urgent importance will be taken up during the recess, and it is expected that the President will, in a measure, regain the health and strength necessary for the fatigues and cares that are sure to come after New Year's and to culminate in the trying Inauguration ceremonies, on the 4th of March. It is expected that when legislative duties are resumed the President will send a special trust message to Congress with the reports of the Bureau of Corporations. It is probable, however, that he may urge strong national supervision of the great trusts engaging in inter-state commerce. Probably Mr. Garfield's plan to secure control by federal charters may be in part recommended. The President has doubtless under consideration important plans and policies with regard to the trusts, with regard to Civil Service Reform and, in fact, with regard to improvement of all branches of the Government service. The tasks before him are gigantic. The fabled wonders performed by Hercules were remarkable enough for his day but were as a child's play compared with the complicated and vexing problems presented to a progressive ruler in modern time.

Fruit Growers Meeting.

The annual meeting of the New York State Fruit Growers' Association will be held in Geneva, N. Y., Tuesday and Wednesday, January 10th and 11th, instead of the 4th and 5th as formerly announced.

An unusually interesting meeting is promised. Among those who will give addresses are Prof. Beach of the State Experiment Station, on the subject, "What constitutes a variety;" Prof. Craig of Cornell University, on judging and scoring fruit; Prof. A. McNeill of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, Ontario, on the trend of modern fruit growing; Miss Anna R. Burroughs of Boston, on fruits in domestic science, and Prof. L. R. Taft, Inspector of the State Board of Agriculture of Michigan, on commercial apple growing. Full reports will also be given by the committees of the Association.

The Association by co-operative buying has saved its members many thousands of dollars in purchase of their fertilizers this year and a very full report of this branch of the Association's work will be made by the Executive Committee.

Arrangements have been made for one and one-third fare for the round trip on the certificate plan, in case one hundred or more certificates are presented; this, with the very reasonable hotel charges at Geneva make the trip a very inexpensive one. Admission to the meetings and exhibits is free and all are invited to be present whether members or not. Especially to those who are intending to purchase spraying apparatus it affords an opportunity to compare different makes that is offered in no other way at this time of year.

Any one wishing accommodations engaged for the meeting, or having horticultural apparatus or appliances which they wish to exhibit at the meeting or have mentioned in the program, address W. L. McKay, Secretary, Geneva, N. Y.

TOM SHERIDAN.

The Handsome, Witty and Spoiled Son of Richard Brinsley.

At the east corner of Bolton street (now 81 Piccadilly) there flourished when the nineteenth century was still young a club devoted to dandyism, diners de luxe and high play, or, to speak cynically, the ruin of mind, body and estate. It was called Watier's. Its presiding genius, or "perpetual president," was Beau Brummel, famous for his cravats, his quarrel with the prince regent and his phenomenal good luck at the then fashionable game of macao. One evening he found the gaming table so full that there was no room for him, but seated there was a friend of his whom he knew to be too poor to play for the extravagant stakes affected by the habitues and who probably would not have been there at all but for the rosy influence of a good dinner with plenty of wine. After a word or two the friends changed places, and before long Brummel rose the richer by £1,500. This sum he faithfully shared with his friend, saying, "There, Tom, go home and give your wife and brats a supper and play no more." The action was kindly and the advice good, and, though the words lacked somewhat respect, the pill was well gilded. Tom was the handsome, witty, spoiled son of Richard Brinsley Sheridan. Of Tom it has been said that he was endowed with all the wit of his father, all the charm of his mother and the good looks of both. Few men seem to have been more universally liked, and when George Colman wrote, "I love and esteem Tom Sheridan heartily and wish success to any scheme in which he is interested," he only expressed a general sentiment.

A few specimens of Tom's wit have been preserved. None is better than a reply to his foolishly indulgent father when remonstrating with him for some imprudence. The father ended by saying, "Why, Tom, my father would never have permitted me to do such a thing," whereupon Tom replied in a tone of assumed indignation, "Sir, would you dream of comparing your father to mine?"—Longman's Magazine.

THE CURVED BALL.

It Is the Atmosphere Which Causes Its Eccentric Shoots.

Most any ten-year-old youngster can curve a ball, even though he does not know why he can do so except that the leather must be held in a certain way. Possibly a half dozen of the major league pitchers know something about the science of the curve, but comparatively few understand why they can produce their "benders." The Scientific American gives the following as the scientific explanation of the matter:

"The pitcher in the field tells us that the ball curves because he gives it a twist, but scientifically this will not do. Why will the twist make the curve? If a ball were thrown in a certain direction and if the force of gravitation were not at work the ball would continue on in a straight line forever. Some force of resistance is then at work when a ball is made to deviate in a curve from its straight course. If a feather is dropped in a vacuum in an exhausted receiver of an air pump it will drop like a shot, but if it is dropped out in the air it will go down irregularly and slowly, shifting from side to side.

"It is the atmosphere which causes the ball to curve. Bearing in mind that the atmosphere is a compressible, elastic gas, we find that when the ball leaves the hand of the pitcher with a rapid rotary motion it 'impinges upon a continuous elastic cushion,' and this moderate resistance, or friction, changes its course in the direction which is given to the rotary motion. Take an outshoot of a right handed pitcher, for instance. He impresses upon the ball a rapid centrifugal rotary motion to the left, and the ball goes to the left because the atmosphere, compressible and elastic, is packed into an elastic cushion just ahead of the ball by the swift forward and rotary motion, and the friction, which is very great in front of the ball, steers it in the direction which it is turning."

A NOTABLE MEETING.

Held in the Interest of "Woman's Rights" in 1701.

The first recorded public meeting in the interest of "woman's rights" was held in the town of Medford, Mass., in 1701. The gallery of the church was occupied by the young unmarried people of the congregation, one side and one half the front gallery being given to the young men, the other side and the other half being given to the young women. But in the seating in this eventful year the young men were given the entire front of the gallery as well, and the young women were only allowed one side of the gallery.

Then it was that things began to happen. Treatment like this wasn't to be tolerated even for a moment. The blood of the future mothers of the Revolution was fully aroused, and the young women made such an uproar and commotion that it speedily became a town matter, and a town meeting was called to restore to them their rights in half of the front gallery.

The young men of the day were bitterly opposed to extending any new privileges to women, and the fight extended beyond Medford. Shortly after the introduction of "pues" into the churches, by which families were separated from the remainder of the congregation, the selectmen of the town of Newbury gave permission to a group of young women to build a "pue" in the gallery of the church upon their own side of the house. This extension of privilege was resented by the young bachelors to such a degree that they broke a window of the church, forced an entrance and hacked the pew in pieces. For this act of sacrilege the young men of Newbury were fined $10 each and sentenced to be whipped or pilloried. But they were manly enough to confess their folly and ask pardon, so this part of their punishment was omitted. So you see the "woman's rights" movement isn't a modern one.—

Mrs. Disraeli's Economy.

Of the rigid economy practiced by Mrs. Disraeli there is one very good story told: Mrs. Disraeli and her husband had come down from London to spend the Easter vacation at Hughenden and had called on the various tradesmen at Wycombe to order the groceries and other requirements for their ten days' or fortnight's stay. It so happened that their sojourn was rather abruptly shortened, and Mrs. Disraeli was seen calling at the grocers and other purveyors, taking out of the carriage the nonconsumed wares and asking the shopkeepers to receive them back and have them reweighed and so to make a reduction in their accounts.

The great statesman, with folded arms, was leaning back in the carriage perfectly nonchalant, but evidently desirous to have no share in the frugal transaction. Such rigid economy was no longer required after the old lady who so admired his books died and left him her entire fortune, amounting to over £40,000.—London Tit-Bits.

Flight of the Woodcock.

Some writers have claimed that the woodcock is sure in his flight, never becoming entangled in briers or creeping vines when in swift flight through close cover. That may have been their experience, but is not mine. I have seen woodcocks when flushed in such spots become so entangled that they were forced to cease flying and drop to the ground to again make a new start in flying. I remember one old fellow that sat hidden before the stand of one of my setters until I almost stepped on him and then, rising nearly into my face, got tangled in a clump of ironweed and fell at my feet. Had I been so disposed I could have caught him in my hands, but my desire was to see if he was injured, and a moment later he proved that he was only a badly frightened woodcock, as he darted away through cover while I watched and laughed at him.—Amateur Sportsman.

How He Proposed.

"How did he do it? What did he say?" inquired a girl impudently. Then, seeing her friend turn away with a smile upon her face, she went on: "I knew you wouldn't tell. Nobody ever will. You will never get a girl to tell just how her sweetheart proposed to her. She'll tell you anything else you like to ask her. If they've had a quarrel she may often in her indignation let out the horrid things he said to her, but she'll keep as silent as the grave about the way he proposed. When I asked my sister she said that when I get older I shall realize that a proposal from the man you promise to marry is one of the things no woman could ever tell another. And I've found this quite true, although no one minds telling me what 'he' said when they didn't want him to propose at all."

A Clever Surgeon.

"I tell you," exclaimed the young medical student, "our house surgeon is a clever fellow."

"How's that?" asked his chum.

"Well, a man was brought in with a crushed leg. The surgeon said it must come off. But by some means or other he cut off the wrong leg."

"But I don't call that clever."

"Wait a bit. The surgeon said it would be terrible for the poor fellow to go about with no legs at all, so he doctored up the crushed leg instead of cutting that off, too, and now it is as good as ever. An ordinary surgeon would have left the fellow legless. Wonderfully skillful, wasn't it?"

How Brahmans Measure Time.

The Brahmans' clocks divide the day into sixty hours of twenty-four minutes each, called ghurees. Occasionally a twenty-four minute sand glass is used, but more commonly a copper bowl with a very small hole in the bottom of it, this bowl being placed on the surface of the water and gradually filled. If the hole in the bottom is correctly sized the bowl sinks in twenty-four minutes. This registers the duration of the ghuree. An attendant thereupon empties the basin and strikes the hour of the day or night on the gong.

How Carlyle Talked.

I have heard Carlyle pour forth a continuous stream of impassioned declamation for more than an hour at a time, and so keen were his characterizations, so felicitous his arrow shots of criticism, so rich his satire, so intense his patriotic sympathy with all that belonged to national life and character, that no listener could wish the wonderful utterance to cease.—"Retrospects."

Could See Her Home.

Hegan—I think Miss de Blank is very rude. Jones—What causes you to think that? I never thought her so. Hegan—I met her out for a walk this afternoon and asked if I might see her home. She said yes, I could see it from the top of the high school building and that it wasn't necessary to go any farther.

A Conscientious Physician.

One of the most distinguished medical practitioners used to say that he considered a fee so necessary to give weight to an opinion that when he looked at his own tongue in the glass he slipped a guinea from one pocket into the other.—London Tit-Bits.

PREYER'S PREDICAMENT.

A Ludicrous Incident in the Life of the Famous Painter.

John W. Preyer, the famous painter of still life, was a remarkably small specimen of the genus homo, differing, however, from ordinary dwarfs in the symmetry and exact proportion of all the parts of his diminutive frame. When between twenty and thirty years of age his fresh, ruddy and beardless face and the shrill and boyish tone of his voice caused people to take him for a child of about eight at the most. This illusion was still further heightened by his dress, a short black velvet jacket with a large turn-down collar, over which his smoothly parted hair hung in thick clusters. When about this age Preyer paid a visit to Munich in order to inspect the art treasures in that city and also to visit his old patron, Master Cornelius, a former president of the Dusseldorf academy. When Preyer called at the house of the latter he had gone out, and the servant who had answered the door ran to tell her mistress that a little boy was waiting outside to see the master. The lady went to speak to the visitor.

"What is it you want, my child?" she asked the painter, who at the approach of the lady took off his velvet cap and made a deep bow, saying in a shrill voice:

"I wish to speak to Mr. Cornelius."

"He is not at home at present, but if you will step inside you can wait for him. He will not be long."

So saying, she took the little fellow into the parlor and offered him a stool to sit on. In a short time the fair hostess became quite charmed with her youthful visitor, and at last she lifted him on her lap and listened with intense delight to the innocent prattle of the clever "child." Suddenly the door opened, and Cornelius himself appeared. Taking in the situation at a glance, he cried:

"Ah, good morning, Mr. Preyer. How on earth did you get here?"

"Mr. Preyer!" And with a shriek Mrs. Cornelius jumped up, tumbled Preyer on the floor and fled into the next room, while Cornelius and Preyer, after the latter had picked himself up again, laughed till the tears streamed down their cheeks. The former had some difficulty in getting his wife to come back again. At last she mustered sufficient courage to allow herself to be formally introduced to the strange visitor, who was retained as a guest to dinner, over which the amiable hostess presently regained her former self possession.

A Disconcerted Committee.

Ferdinand Hassler, the father of the United States coast survey system, was once waited upon by a committee of congress sent to inquire into the progress of the work. The committee reached New York and wended their way upstairs to the room where Hassler was drilling his classes and preparing them for the work. Hassler, who allowed no intruders, met them at the door and inquired their business. They answered that they had come to investigate. "What part of the work do you wish to inspect?" inquired the Swiss mathematician. Congress had no definite idea on that point. "Then you had better go and find out," returned Hassler as he shut the door in the faces of the astonished committee. The committee looked at each other and on second sober thought concluded that Hassler was about right and quietly wended their way downstairs and back to Washington.

A Toad's Cunning.

A scientific journal tells this story of a toad's cunning: A brood of chickens was fed with moistened meal in saucers, and when the dough soured a little it attracted large numbers of flies. An observant toad had evidently noticed this, and every day toward evening he would make his appearance in the yard, hop to a saucer, climb in and roll over until he was covered with meal, having done which he awaited developments. The flies, enticed by the smell, soon swarmed around the scheming batrachian, and whenever one passed within two inches or so of his nose his tongue darted out and the fly disappeared. The plan worked so well that the toad made a regular business of it.

LIVER TROUBLE CURED.

Cal-cura Solvent, Dr. Kennedy's NEW Medicine, Drove the Disease Out of Mr. Larsen's System.

A proprietary medicine that is not without honor in the city where it is made, must be a good thing. No chance for deception there, where everybody knows all about the men who make it. In Rondout, City of Kingston, N. Y., where Dr. David Kennedy lived and practiced for so many years, his new medicine is highly regarded and many wonderful cures have been wrought by it. There is Mr. Christopher Larsen, the leading painter and decorator of that city, who says:

"I have not had a sick day since I was cured of kidney and liver trouble, and painter's colic, by Dr. Kennedy's new medicine called Cal-cura Solvent. It drove the disease out of my system, so it never came back. Nothing like Cal-cura Solvent to purify the blood." $1.00; all druggists.

A GREAT ENGINEER'S TASK.

John F. Wallace and His Problems as Isthmian Canal Engineer.

John Findley Wallace, chief engineer of the Panama canal, is fifty-two years of age and in the prime of his physical and mental powers. But the prospects are he will be an old man before the great engineering project of which he is in charge reaches its finishing stage. Mr. Wallace is accustomed to handling big engineering propositions. During his connection with the Illinois Central railroad as chief engineer and afterward as general manager that railroad was almost entirely rebuilt.

While the congressional committee on interstate and foreign commerce was on the isthmus recently in company with Judge Taft, Engineer Wallace explained to members of the committee the results of the study he has thus far given the canal problems. He presented estimates of the cost of the work and the time required for its construction according to four different plans. According to the plan which Engineer Wallace appeared to favor most, that of a sea level canal, it will cost $300,000,000 and require twenty years for construction, though it could be open for traffic in fifteen years' time. There are many advantages in favor of a sea level canal. It is urged that, though more expensive to construct, it would be more economical of operation when completed. For a ninety foot level canal the estimated cost is $200,000,000. Between these extremes are the propositions for sixty foot and thirty foot levels, costing respectively $225,000,000 and $250,000,000.

Already over 3,000 men are at work on the isthmus under the direction of the canal commission. Of these over 2,000 are laborers who receive 15 cents silver an hour.

PAST MASTER OF POLITICS.

Senator Mitchell of Oregon and the Charges Against Him.

United States Senator John H. Mitchell of Oregon declares that he does not fear investigation into the charges which have been made against him in connection with land fraud cases now under the searchlight in his state. He attributes the charges to the personal animosity toward him of Secretary Hitchcock of the interior department and says he will face his detractors and prove his innocence.

The Oregon senator is a veteran politician. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1835, was educated in the public schools and studied law, beginning its practice in Pennsylvania, but removing to California. From California he removed in 1860 to Oregon. He was sent to the Oregon legislature in 1862 and in 1865 came near being elected to the United States senate, being defeated in the caucus by only one vote.

He was successful in his aspirations to the senate in 1872, when he was elected to succeed Henry W. Corbett, taking his seat in March, 1873, and serving until 1879, when he retired in favor of the late J. N. Dolph. He was chosen for another term in 1885 and in 1891 was re-elected for a third six-year term. In 1897 he was the unanimous choice of the Republican members of the legislature to succeed himself, but a contest which occurred prevented his election. He was again chosen senator in 1901. Thus his present term will expire in 1907. Senator Mitchell as a young man was a professor of medical jurisprudence in Willamette university, Salem, Ore., serving from 1867 to 1871. He is regarded as a past master of the art of political management.

Old British Drinks.

Mead, made of honey, water and spices; bragget, morat and pigment, variants, were very early drinks in England.

Currant wine, elderberry, gooseberry, mulberry, quince, plum and apricot wine are old fashioned varieties. Parsnips and turnips produce a very powerful village brandy.

Cowslip and rhubarb wine are very different, the former weak and the latter very heady.

Fir tree tops, green nettle tops, birch and beech sap, bog myrtle, heather—all produced liquors. And did not a New England rhyme, meant to encourage the patriotic boycott on British goods, run:

We can make liquor to sweeten our lips
From pumpkins and parsnips and walnut tree chips?

Sloe gin and rue gin are queer drinks. Negus is sherry, hot water, lemon, sugar and nutmeg. The London Outlook says that Derbyshire women used to drink in secret a "ferociously intoxicating" potion made out of the poisonous foxglove.—New York World.

Nollekens and Chantrey.

Nollekens, the sculptor of George III., had a rare generosity which more than made up for his eccentricities. When Chantrey, afterward so famous, sent his bust of Horne Tooke to the exhibition he was young and unfriended. Nollekens said to those who were arranging the works for the exhibition:

"There's a fine, a very fine, work. Let the man who made it be known. Remove one of my busts and put this one in its place."

Often afterward when he was requested to make a bust he would say in his persuasive, well nigh irresistible way: "Go to Chantrey. He's the man for a bust. He'll make a good bust of you. I always recommend him."

Yet this same man was penurious to a fault and by absolute frugality accumulated a fortune of $1,000,000.

A New Brand.

A prominent missionary bishop of the Episcopal church, according to the Washington Star, was in the habit of introducing among the Eskimos who were his special charges many things to amuse or interest them in order that he might gain their attention to his preaching. It happened, however, that in spite of the various ingenious inventions which he placed before them these sons of the arctic regions continued to be impressed by the white man's canned food more than by anything else he brought with him. Being unwilling to eat the blubber and drink the oil of the Eskimos, the white man always came with many cans of meat and vegetables.

One day the bishop above referred to decided to spring a genuine surprise on the natives. He had with him on this trip a talking machine, with records in the Eskimo tongue. He gathered his charges all around him in the little meeting house and started the machine a-going. Everybody was certainly puzzled. At last a smile broke in upon the face of one.

"Canned white man," he said in glee.

The African Hyena.

"One of the great pests of Africa," said a traveler, "is the hyena. Lions and leopards do a lot of damage, but their skins, if they are shot or trapped, are some compensation for the loss they cause. The average settler, be he farmer, trader or official, rather welcomes their presence near his camp for the sake of the excitement which they afford, and very few men would hesitate to sacrifice a bullock or several head of goats or sheep for the sake of bagging a lion. But the skin of the hyena is worthless, and there is no credit whatever in shooting him, as he is an arrant coward. He makes the night hideous with his howls, and in the dark he is very daring and will enter compounds and huts and carry off almost anything. Nothing is too old or tough for him. Horns, skins, old boots—anything is grist to his mill.

HARMONIOUS SETTLEMENT OF SENATORIAL CONTROVERSY.

HON. CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW.

The harmonious adjustment of the Senatorial contest in this State is a matter of extreme congratulation among Republicans. The unanimous choice will fall upon Senator Depew, who has rendered the party unselfish and devoted service and whose ability as a representative of the great Empire State in the United States Senate is conceded by all.

A pleasing feature of the close of what may now be called a vigorous campaign for the proferred honor on the part of Ex-Governor Black and his friends, is the magnanimity displayed by the distinguished contestants.

Ex-Governor Black, as soon it became evident that the preponderance of sentiment throughout the State was in favor of the re-election of Senator Depew, addressed the following letter to the genial senator:

My Dear Senator Depew:

My name has been considerably discussed in connection with the senatorship. This discussion has not arisen from my seeking or desire. My private interests and personal tastes have both been distinctly against entering a contest or even accepting public office, even if it came without controversy. It seems clear to me now that any further use of my name may result in consequences which might hereafter impair the prospects of Republican success, while they served no useful public end. My duty as a Republican is, therefore, in complete harmony with my private sentiments.

I shall be earnestly for your re-election, and in conveying this assurance I wish to express my appreciation of the uniform courtesy of your attitude oward me.

Very respectfully yours,
FRANK S. BLACK,

Senator Depew sent the following reply:

My Dear Governor:

Thanks for your kind letter. It is generous and magnanimous and its spirit in harmony with my most cordial regard for yourself. I have been fully aware of your own reluctance to re-enter public life at present, and of the insistence of friends so difficult for any one to resist. For the conclusion reached and its harmonious acceptance the party is under great obligations to you.

I can only repeat what you know, an assurance of personal friendship, intensified by the expressions of your letter and your action.

Faithfully yours,
CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW.

Subsequently Senator Depew announced to representatives of the press that the fight was over. "Harmony," said Mr. Depew, "has been brought about, and Governor Odell has done it. He is the only man in the State who could have brought harmony out of the situation, and I am very grateful to him."

Port Arthur Captured.

The Japanese forces under General Nogi have captured Port Arthur after a seige of eleven months—the bloodiest on record.

The Webb orchestra has generously volantseered to furnish music at the High school benefit for the Library, to be given in Stephen's Opera house on Wednesday evening, Jan. 11.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

The Young People's Guild of Zion Episcopal church are making arrangements to present "Continental Kettle Drum" in the near future. The management will be the same as the successful Merchants Carnival given several years ago.

Mrs. George Chauncey, president of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Hospital Association, in behalf of the association, earnestly requests donations of soft old muslin for use in the hospital. The request is most urgent as there are now two cases of typhoid fever to be cared for.

The Woman's Home Missionary society of the Presbyterian church will serve one of their excellent teas in the church parlors this Wednesday evening. Mrs. Thomas Hunter is chairman of the committee and a most tempting menu will be served the guests.

Owing to the illness of Mrs. F. P Connell, the Timely Topics club which was to have enjoyed her hospitality last evening, was entertained by Mrs. W. H. Ross. The leaders for the evening were Mr. Fred Snyder and Mrs. Gilkie, and a very interesting program was presented.

The men's meeting in the Presbyterian church on Wednesday evening, was well attended and exceedingly enjoyable. The address by Congressman Driscoll of Syracuse was replete with interesting and instructive thoughts. The music by the male quartette was a pleasing feature and the refreshments were delicious.

POLICE DEPARTMENT

Annual Report and Creditable Showing by Chief Ross

The following concise statement has been received from Chief of Police Ross concerning his department. It will be noticed that there has not been one case of burglary reported during the twelve months, which is very flattering to the vigilence and efficiency of the force. The department has been so well managed since its organization that there has been no adverse criticism of it—all the officers seemingly being intent on doing their duty.

This statement does not include either judge or patrolmen's fees for civil matters

During the year three cases of insanity have been cared for by the department until committed to State hospital at Ogdensburg.

First Annual Reunion, Class '04

On Thursday evening, the class of '04, Fulton High school, held their first annual reunion at the home of Miss Hazel Gardner in Oneida street. Out of a class of twenty members, sixteen were present. Among those who were present from out-of-town were Miss Florence Hunter of Wellsley College, Mr. Robert Reagan of Syracuse University and Mr. Gilbert Benedict of Hamilton College. The guests assembled at 6 o'clock and participated in a mock marriage, in which Miss Hazel Gardner enacted the role of groom; Miss Maude Newell of bride; Miss Cassie Marsh, clergyman; the Misses Mabel Dominick and Anna Brannan, bridesmaids; Miss Helen Brown ring-bearer; the Misses Hattie Wilcox and Lizzie McCallister, ushers. The bridal chorus from Mendelssohn was charmingly played by Miss Florence Hunter. In the home decorations the class colors of purple and white were lavishly used. At 7 o'clock the banquet was served, after which Miss Helen Brown became toastmistress. So admirably did she perform that function that she was given the title of "most witty indeed." The following were the toasts and responders:

Future of the class—Mr. George Washburn.
Social side of Wellsley—Miss Florence Hunter.
Joys and sorrows of a post-graduate—Miss Mabel Dominick.
Class life—Miss Maude Newell.
Hamilton college—Mr. Gilbert Benedict.
Fraternity—Miss Gertrude Johnston.
Lecture on medics—Mr. Robert Reagan.

The evening was most delightfully spent and the class repaired to their homes, determined to hold many more reunions.

Information for Parents.

As promotions are to be made this month in the Fourth Street and Phillips Street schools, new classes will begin work in the primary grades in these buildings on Monday, January 30.

Parents wishing to start their children in school before the next school year begins in September, should enter them, if possible, on January 30, which is the beginning of the second half of the school year.

Superintendent of Schools.

DIED.

The body of John Cole, formerly of this city, was found on the railroad tracks near Red Creek on Wednesday night. He had evidently been walking on the R. W. & O. track and a passenger train struck him, crushing his skull. The deceased was about 35 years of age.

Maggie, aged 38, wife of Mr. Ellsworth Rude, died at her home, No. 56 West First street, on Monday morning after an illness of several years duration. She is survived by her husband and one son, Willie. The funeral services will be held from the late home this Wednesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock. The sympathy of all goes out to the husband and son in their affliction.

The community was saddened on Tuesday noon by the intelligence of the death of Thomas Ferris, aged 71, who had been ill at his home, No. 161 South Fourth street, for nearly two years. The deceased was one of the most highly respected residents of Fulton, where he had resided for over 30 years. He was bookkeeper in the L. C Seymour & Son mills in this city for 30 years, holding the position until failing health compelled him to retire. He was most active in Masonic circles, having held the offices of Workshipful Master of Hiram Lodge and Most Excellent High Priest of Fulton Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, as well as many minor offices in the lodges. He was an elder in the Presbyterian church at the time of his death, and always took active interest in all church work, especially in the Sunday school. The funeral services will be held from his late home on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle officiating. The deceased is survived by his widow one daughter, Miss Louise Ferris of Brooklyn; two sisters, Mrs. Jennie Vandenberg and Miss Nancy Ferris of Canandaigua and one brother, Mr. William Ferris of Lima, N. Y.

COMMON COUNCIL.

The regular meeting of the Common Council was held last evening. Alderman Russell was re-elected president of the Council and the different committees will remain the same as last year. The west side sewer bonds will be offered for sale on January 18. The rate for rental of the City Hall will hereafter be 25 cents per hour, or fraction thereof. The report of City Chamberlain Hinsdale was read and referred to the Finance Committee.

On Sunday the Rev. P. J. Kearney passed the twenty fifth milestone in his pastorate of the Church of the Immaculate Conception. He briefly reviewed the work done during that period and stated that he hoped the close of 1905 would see the church edifice completed with the two towers in place, the mason work steps leading to the church repaired, and other detail finished. Father Kearney thanked his congregation for the liberal Christmas contribution, the largest received during his pastorate.

The fire department was called to the homes of Messrs O. D. Stanton and Michael Fitzgerald in Fremont street on Tuesday morning about 3 o'clock, where a fierce conflagration was well under headway. The two houses were consumed with most of their contents, the families escaping without time to cloth themselves. But for the barking of a dog belonging to Mr. Stanton his family would undoubtedly have perished from suffocation. The supposition is that the fire started by drying clothes falling from a line over Mr. Stanton's stove, and igniting the woodwork. The fierce gale which prevailed all night soon carried the flames to Mr. Fitzerald's house which stood but ten feet away. The firemen had hard work in the stinging cold, and few escaped without burns or frost bitten ears, hands or feet. The greatest sympathy is felt for the families who are deprived of their homes.

Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Huntington of Old Forge have been spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Gardner in this city. Mr. Huntington recommends Old Forge for all the ills that flesh is heir to. He reports a thermometer of 30 degrees below zero and the residents not suffering at all with the cold. He rather pities people who cannot sojourn in the "balmy" air of the woodland during these Winter months.

Good Stories About Stage Folk

DENMAN THOMPSON of "Old Homestead" fame was discussing with a party of friends the great automobile race on Long Island.

"They hadn't any right," said one of the party, "to deprive the farmers of the highway which they are paying taxes for."

In reply, says the New York Times, the actor told this story:

"A few days after the race," he said, "I happened to be driving over part of the same course. I stopped at a farmhouse and asked to be allowed to give the horse some water. I got some good hard cider along with it.

"'What did you think of the automobile race?' I asked my genial host.

"'The best thing for me that ever happened,' replied the farmer.

DENMAN THOMPSON.

"'What!' I exclaimed. 'I thought all you farmers were against it.'

"'Not me,' said the farmer. 'You see, I got a balky mule that draws my stuff into market every morning. Yesterday morning that mule balked halfway to the market. Couldn't get him to stir. While I was trying to coax him I saw a strange thing lying in the roadway—sort of a rubber thing. I picked it up and accidentally squeezed it. It let out a turrible noise, just like one of those machines, and that mule started, me on the tailboard, and never stopped till it got to the ferry. I brought it home and I showed it to Manda, and we squeezed it and squeezed it and squeezed it, and every darn chicken ran to the coop, every darn pig hid in the pen, every darn cow ran to the barn, the cat got behind the stove, the dog got in his house, and Mandy and me spent the quietest night we've had in many a day. No, siree, of all the labor saving machines I ever did hear of this is the best.'"

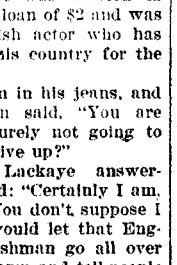
While a newspaper interviewer was visiting Wilton Lackaye in his dressing room in Chicago recently a note was brought in. It was written in French, asked for a loan of $2 and was signed by an English actor who has been "resting" in this country for the last four years.

Lackaye dug down in his jeans, and the newspaper man said, "You are surely not going to give up?"

WILTON LACKAYE.

Lackaye answered: "Certainly I am. You don't suppose I would let that Englishman go all over town and tell people that I can't read French?"

Lackaye's success in "The Pit" brought a flood of manuscripts of plays from all parts of the United States. Recently by special appointment a dramatist undertook to read his play to the star and several of the leading members of his company. After he had read the manuscript he remarked that he knew nothing so terrible as reading a piece before a critical audience.



"I know one thing much more terrible," said Lackaye.

"What can that be?" asked the dramatist.

"To be obliged to sit and hear it," answered the actor.

"I was the hero in a play some years ago," John Drew said recently, "and in one scene was supposed to hurl the first heavy over a low parapet down, down to his death four feet below. Blank and I usually grappled and swayed about the stage until I had him back to the pasteboard wall. Then I would whisper, 'Ready,' and he would stiffen up, I would exert a little strength, he would raise himself by pushing his hands gently against my shoulders, and the finale was always satisfactory and sensational.

"But one night Blank came on in a slightly dazed condition. He had been up all night and had been drinking just enough to make him drowsy. He spoke his lines all right, and we got along nicely until it came time for him to die. Then, with a muttered 'Curse you!' we clinched, but I at once saw that I was to have my hands full. An old negro once told me: 'De harder youse grip a eel, de wuss youse gwine ter find it. Dat eel jes' gwine ter git away from you shuah, sah. But jes' han'le dat eel gently, and der's a big heap o' difference.'

JOHN DREW.

"Well, I suppose it's the same with the inert human form. Anyway, the minute I grappled Blank he collapsed. When I picked him up by the middle his head and shoulders slumped, and I could not elevate him. Then I got behind him, clutched him by the shoulders and tried to pass my arms about his knees, but his body slipped through my grasp like a bag of meal. Then I tried to stand him up so that I could catch hold of his ankles and topple him over. We went down together. He made no opposition; just reclined supine. After I had winded myself to no avail he staggered to his feet and said huskily, 'Let me do it,' and over he vaulted.

"But it taught me a lesson—that is, that no big athlete can throw a small man over a fence or wall if the slim man will only relax his muscles and do nothing. I've seen it tried since then on a wager several times, but I never saw the aggressor win."

Robert Edeson is a native of New Orleans. His father was a Confederate officer, and Mr. Edeson still carries several Confederate bills in his pocketbook. According to his friends, this is for good luck. The cashier at a New York restaurant has a different explanation.

ROBERT EDESON.

One night not long ago Mr. Edeson had a very poor dinner, and when the waiter brought him the bill he handed over a twenty dollar Confederate note in payment.

"This is no good, sir," exclaimed the waiter.

"It's as good as the dinner," replied the actor.

Joseph Jefferson has stocked the lake on his Louisiana farm with bass and other game fish. Not long ago he came upon a stranger fishing in his lake.

"See here!" said the great comedian. "What do you mean by catching my fish?"

"Begorra," replied the fisherman, slowly removing his pipe from his mouth, "Ol'm not fishin'! Ol'm t'achin' these wurrums how to swim!"

Some years ago Mr. Jefferson took a lady to a restaurant, and when he put his hand in his pocket to pay his bill he couldn't find a cent. He explained his position to the cashier, but the cashier didn't know him. The perspiration began to ooze, when a gentleman stepped up, laid a twenty dollar bill on the desk and said, "I know you, sir; allow me to settle." Jefferson was profuse in his thanks and said, "You must give me your name and address, sir, in order that I may call round tomorrow and settle." "Never mind," said the stranger, with a smile; "that bill was a counterfeit, and I got $17 in change."

JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

Willie Jefferson, son of the famous Joe, is a typical Jefferson in habits, manners, looks and wit. Some years ago Willie was given a nice fat sum out of the savings of his distinguished father and allowed to go to Europe for the summer. Willie went. One day Joseph Jefferson received a cablegram from Willie, then in Paris:

"Send $500. Willie."

The elder Jefferson answered:

"What for?"

The reply seemed to arrive almost before Mr. Jefferson's message was sent. It read:

"For Willie."

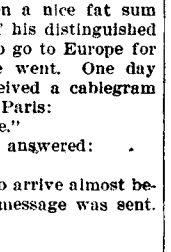
Willie received the money.

Not long ago Mrs. Patrick Campbell was returning to England from France after a short holiday and on nearing Folkestone pier she noticed that a young man, whom she considered rather fresh, was standing beside her, gazing toward the houses on the hilly ground behind the beach. Suddenly the young man remarked to her:

MRS. PATRICK CAMPBELL.

"See that house up there, Mrs. Campbell?" indicating the exact location of a fine looking mansion standing out in the sunlight.

"Yes," said Mrs. Pat.



With a certain amount of pride he remarked, "Well, I was born there."

"What a pity!" was all Mrs. Campbell said.

And the young man dropped the conversation.

A few weeks ago Mme. Sembrich was feeling out of sorts and called in her physician. As she was to sing the next night heroic treatment was necessary to get her into condition. A part of this consisted of some very nasty medicine.

"I will take anything but that," she said after the doctor had tried to persuade her for some time that it was unpleasant, but very wonderful in its effects. "One taste is enough."

MARCELLA SEMBRICH.

"But you must sing," said the doctor, "and this medicine is the only thing that will be sure to get you in anything like a proper condition. You must not think of yourself alone. Do it for the sake of the public. Why, I believe they would do anything for you."

"Would they?"

"Indeed they would."

"Well, then let them take it," said the singer, and the subject changed.

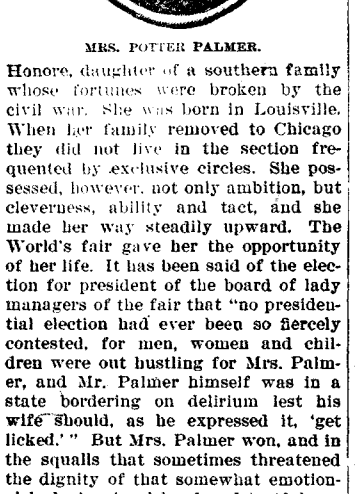
CHICAGO'S SOCIAL STORM.

Mrs. Potter Palmer and Her Troubles as Leader in the Smart Set.

Mrs. Potter Palmer, whose name was much in print when she was president of the board of lady managers of the Chicago World's fair, has been in the public eye recently on account of her way of deciding who's who in Chicago society. Mrs. Palmer has long been regarded by Chicago's smart set as the city's social dictator. She is supposed to reign over society and to wield an authority more or less absolute. Her social sway has been endangered, however, by her recent action in appointing the patronesses for the charity ball. All ladies belonging to the innermost social circles are supposed to be on this list, but in making her selections this year Mrs. Palmer has left off Mrs. Hobart Chatfield Chatfield-Taylor, Mrs. Harry Higginbotham, Mrs. Harold McCormick, who was Miss Edith Rockefeller; Mrs. R. T. Crane, Sr., the "million dollar bride," and some others who have hitherto considered themselves of some account in the social world of Chicago.

Mrs. Palmer and her husband were practically unknown socially in Chicago until the rebuilding of the city after the great fire. Before her marriage to Potter Palmer in 1871 she was Bertha



MRS. POTTER PALMER.

Honore, daughter of a southern family whose fortunes were broken by the civil war. She was born in Louisville. When her family removed to Chicago they did not live in the section frequented by exclusive circles. She possessed, however, not only ambition, but cleverness, ability and tact, and she made her way steadily upward. The World's fair gave her the opportunity of her life. It has been said of the election for president of the board of lady managers of the fair that "no presidential election had ever been so fiercely contested, for men, women and children were out hustling for Mrs. Palmer, and Mr. Palmer himself was in a state bordering on delirium lest his wife should, as he expressed it, 'get licked.'" But Mrs. Palmer won, and in the squalls that sometimes threatened the dignity of that somewhat emotional body her level head and tactfulness often served the board in good stead. In 1900 she was United States commissioner to the Paris exposition.

PRINCE GUSTAF ADOLF.

Talk of His Paying Court to Miss Alice Roosevelt.

They are gossiping in Sweden over the possibility of a match between Prince Gustaf Adolf, the duke of Scania, and Miss Alice Roosevelt. The Duke of Scania is the eldest son of the Swedish crown prince and therefore is heir presumptive to the throne of Sweden and Norway. In the event of his marriage to Miss Roosevelt that young lady would in the natural course of events some day be a queen. The humorous feature of the situation consists in the fact that Prince Adolf and the daughter of President Roosevelt not only have no intimate acquaintance, but have never even met each other. In Europe that might be no barrier to a marriage, but in this country customs are quite different, and the idea of Miss Roosevelt, who inherits considerable of her father's independence, encouraging matrimonial advances from a young man she has never seen is calculated to raise a smile.

Stockholm dispatches to Paris stated that arrangements had been made by the crown prince to have his son meet Miss Roosevelt at the residence of an American in London with the object of taking the first step toward the offer of his heart and hand. The prince, who is a handsome young man of twenty-two, is now in Paris, and he says it is true he is going to London, but that at present he is more interested in automobiles than in matrimony.

The Sarcastic Cabman.

The whip flicking hero of this story had driven an irascible old fellow a good three mile journey. When the fare climbed stiffly out and slowly produced a big pocketbook cabby drew a deep breath and prepared to be sarcastic. A watchful constable standing near prevented all thought of his relieving his feelings by the use of picturesque terms.

Cabby watched his fare make a lengthy mental calculation of the distance he had been driven, select the exact legal fare, count it twice over and then proffer it to him, with an expression on his face plainly indicative of "Now, then, you dare dispute it and I'll take your number."

But cabby didn't dispute it. Instead he promptly accepted it; but, slipping his hand into another pocket, he produced a farthing, which he handed to the fare.

"What's this for?" demanded the old fellow.

"One farden, currint coin of the relum, sir," said cabby, gathering up his reins. "I druv yer jest the exact distance represented by arf of that there shekel under the three mile you reckoned. I ain't got no arf farden about me, but it don't matter. You can keep the change. I ain't mean. Goodby, sir, and God bless you. Geeup, 'orse!"

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

The Doctor's Twins.

A worthy Glasgow doctor while enjoying a holiday in Arran took the opportunity along with a friend to go whiting fishing. During operations the doctor's sinker came off and was lost.

Here was a dilemma. No sinker, no more fishing that day. Ha! Happy thought! His flask. No sooner said than done. The bottle was filled with salt water, carefully corked and sent down on its mission.

After a few minutes' interval, "Ha," quoth the doctor, "a bite!" And up he pulls at racing speed a fine pair of whiting, one on each hook.

"Ha, doctor, twins this time!" exclaimed his companion.

"Yes," quoth the doctor, "and brought up on the bottle too."—London Globe.

To "Make No Bones."

The phrase to "make no bones," which is in such common use, may be generally explained as implying that something is done readily and with no such impediment as a bone might be to one who was eating food. It has been explained to be a modification of an older phrase to "find no bones," which seems to have had reference to bones found in soup and hindrances to the consumer. Some folk not only find but make difficulties and hindrances, at which they are content to stick. In Skelton's "Elynour Rummyng," 1529, the lady so readily believed the story that she—

Supped it up at ones (once),
She found therein no bones.

Surely a Bad Pen.

An Alabama statesman was writing with a noisy, spluttering pen. Laying the pen down, he smiled and said:

"Once I was spending the evening with a friend of mine in Selma. We sat in the dining room, and from the kitchen came a painful scratching sound.

"'Martha,' said my friend to the maid, 'what is that scratching in the kitchen? It must be the dog trying to get in.'

"'Huh!' said Martha. 'Dat's no dawg scratchin' de do'. Dat's de cook a-writin' a love letter to her honeysuckle.'"

Crosses on Beer Barrels.

Beer barrels are invariably marked with a series of crosses, which nowadays denote the quality of the beer contained in the cask. These crosses were originally put on by the monks, who then made all the malt liquors, as a sort of trademark. The crosses were not of the same shape as now shown, but were more akin to the shape of a crucifix and were intended to show that by "their oath sworn on the cross" the beer supplied was of a fit and drinkable condition.—London Times.

Why Babies Look Old.

THE LAND OF NICOTINE.

Smoking Seems to Be an Essential Part of Japanese Life.

I think every man, woman and child in Japan smokes. This may be an exaggeration, especially as regards the children, but it is no exaggeration to say that smoking is as much a part of the everyday life of the people as is eating or drinking, and it is indulged in by women with the same innocent, nonchalant enjoyment as is exhibited by the men. It was a bit of a shock to me when I first came to Japan to come face to face with this fact before I had an opportunity to form any sort of impressions of the little women in whom I was prepared to be so interested. I landed at Nagasaki and almost immediately took a train for Moji, whence I was to go for a trip through the interior. It was early morning, and, being in the midst of the rainy season, everything was soggy damp.

The first class carriage into which I was shown was anything but first class; it was unclean and badly ventilated, and its only other occupants were two Japanese ladies and a man. The women had evidently just finished breakfasting in the car and were now sitting on their feet upon the seat absolutely enwrapped in clouds of the most evil smelling smoke, which they puffed from long cigarettes. They were beautifully dressed in silk kimonos and were undoubtedly gentlewomen. I knew that even then, when I had seen so few, and I must confess I was rather annoyed, because their daintiness seemed to be entirely destroyed. But after a residence of months I think I would rather see them smoke than not. They do it so daintily, so innocently, with such frank enjoyment, and so constantly, that it seems a very part of their quaint happiness.—Eleanor Franklin in Leslie's Weekly.

There is No Diease on Earth

but what can be cured if treated in time and the proper remedy is used. Medical authorities have known for a long time that the berry of the Saw Palmetto is one of the best remedial agents known. Vernal Palmettona (Palmetto Berry Wine) is made from a combination of Palmetto berries and seven other vegetable drugs of well known curative properties, and the remedy is meeting with a hitherto unheard of success in the cure of all diseases of the stomach, kidneys, liver and bladder, and the minor ailments that are brought on by diseases of the mucous membrane and impure blood. This remedy works in harmony with nature, and the Vernal Remedy Company, of Le Roy, N. Y., will cheerfully send you, free of charge, a trial bottle and booklet. Do not send any money as they wish to convince you first that the remedy is all or more than they claim for it. It is also sold by druggists everywhere.

Fevers and Foods.

In typhoid fever the intestines are the seat of the trouble, and all solid foods should be debarred. Here nutritious broths and liquids are needed, but no meat should be given until the temperature has been normal for several days. In scarlet fever avoid all nitrogenous foods, because the kidneys and skin are congested, and those are the organs that excrete nitrogen. Their work should be lessened, not increased. For this reason any of the legumes, beans, peas or lentils should not be used. Broth made from them would be most disastrous, while beef or mutton broth, which is less nutritious, can be readily assimilated.

Congratulations.

Mr. John H. Cullom, editor of the Garland, Texas, News, has written a letter of congratulations to the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as follows: "Sixteen years ago when our first child was a baby, he was subject to croupy spells and we were very uneasy about him. We began using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in 1887, and finding it such a reliable remedy for colds and croups, we have never been without it in the house since that time. We have five children and have given it to all of them with good results. One good feature of this remedy is that it is not disagreeable to take and our babies really like it. Another is that it is not dangerous, and there is no risk of giving an over dose. I congratulate you upon the success of your remedy." For sale by H. C. Giesler.

An Old Cure For Scurvy.

Scurvy used to be regularly treated when it was possible by burying the patients up to their necks in fresh earth, a practice officially recommended in the British navy less than a century ago. Twenty of the crew of the frigate Blonde were so treated on the shore of Donna Maria bay, Santo Domingo. Holes were dug in the softest soil on the beach. Into each of these a man was put and buried to his chin, while a detachment of their shipmates was told off to keep the flies from their faces. They were kept in this position for two hours, and the treatment was so effective that four days later all the sufferers were able to rejoin the frigate.

A SEASON'S PLEASURE.

What It Cost One Woman In Peace of Mind and Comfort.

Mary Makepeace sat down in her favorite chair in her own room and threw her head back, with a long sigh. "No words can tell how glad I am that I've made my last visit for the summer," she said. "Now I shall have some peace, not to mention pleasure."

"My dear!" said her mother reproachfully.

"I mean it," returned Mary. "Of course I like change of scene, but I am tired of adapting my whole life to others, as I am expected to do as a welcome guest."

"My dear!" said her mother again. "Think how kind everybody has been to you."

"They meant to be—they were kind," Mary said wearily, "yet I feel as if I had barely escaped with my life, and you will admit that is not just the right kind of after feeling.

"Let me tell you, mother," Mary continued. "At the Fosters' I changed my hours for rising, for retiring and for eating my meals. At the Lanes' I changed father's politics—for of course I haven't any of my own—to please Mr. Lane, and I had all I could do to keep from changing my religion to please Mrs. Lane.

"At the Jenkins' I changed all my views about what constitutes diversion to suit the family in general. At the Pages' I entirely changed my point of view concerning music and books. And at the Nevins', where I was ill, I changed my doctor and took stuff which I felt sure would poison me just to please them.

"I ate cheese, which I abhor, and gave up fruit, which I like, at the Fisks'. I slept with closed windows at Great-aunt Maria's because she is afraid of a breath of air, and I drank twenty-one pints of hot water the four days I was at Cousin Thomas' to 'flush my system.'

"No," said Mary in a firm voice. "I pay no more visits for months to come. Home keeping youth may have homely wits, but if I go about much more I shall not have any wits at all."—Youth's Companion.

Impoverished Soil

Impoverished soil, like impoverished blood, needs a proper fertilizer. A chemist by analyzing the soil can tell you what fertilizer to use for different products.

If your blood is impoverished your doctor will tell you what you need to fertilize it and give it the rich, red corpuscles that are lacking in it. It may be you need a tonic, but more likely you need a concentrated fat food, and fat is the element lacking in your system.

There is no fat food that is so easily digested and assimilated as

The Misuse of "Quite."

"Quite" strictly means "completely" and is rightly used in such sentences as "The flower is quite faded." Its secondary meaning, "very," "to a great extent," has the authority of good writers, though such expressions as "quite young" and "quite hot" have a colloquial ring about them. There is, however, springing up of late the slovenly practice of employing the adverb "quite" with a noun—e. g., "quite a panic ensued." If an adverb can modify a noun, where is the distinction between adverb and adjective? As a matter of fact, the functions of the adverb seem to be encroaching on those of the adjective.—London Review.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Executive Chamber.
Albany, Jan. 4, 1905.

To the Legislature:

Pursuant to the mandate of the constitution I have the honor herewith to communicate to you by message the condition of the state, together with such recommendations as seem to me expedient at this time.

State Debt.

On Sept. 30, 1904, the close of the fiscal year, the total debt of the state amounted to $9,410,660, classified as follows:

Adirondack park	$510,000
National guard public defenses	400,000
Canals	8,500,660
Total	$9,410,660

The sinking fund created by the annual tax of 13-100 of a mill per dollar of assessed valuation of real and personal property, provided by chapter 79 of the laws of 1895, amounted on the 30th of September, 1904, to $3,695,493.55, which, in effect, reduces the amount of the canal debt to the sum of $4,804,166.45 yet to be provided for. The debt maturing during the next fiscal year consists of $55,000 Adirondack park bonds, issued pursuant to chapter 561 of the laws of 1895, maturing Jan. 30, 1905, and $200,000 national guard public defense bonds, issued pursuant to chapter 672 of the laws of 1898, $100,000 of which mature on the first days of May and November respectively, and for the payment of which provision must be made by the legislature.

Receipts and Expenditures.

The total receipts of the state treasury from all sources for the year ending Sept. 30, 1904, were $25,548,962.98; the total payments were $25,900,796.73, showing an excess of payments over receipts for the year amounting to $351,833.75. The actual available surplus on Oct. 1, 1904, was $8,762,236.62. The total appropriations in force Oct. 1, 1904, amounted to $26,735,457.70, which is $2,319,228.07 more than the income of the last fiscal year which was applicable to the payment of appropriations, so that with the same revenue as last year there would be this excess of expenditures over receipts which must be met from the surplus. But the comptroller estimates that the revenues for the present fiscal year applicable to the expenses of government will show a decided falling off as compared with the receipts for the fiscal year last past, unless provision be made by law for increased revenue from present sources or for new sources of revenue.

The satisfactory condition of affairs whereby the tax laws produced sufficient revenue for the requirements of the state is threatened by the effect of very recent decisions rendered by the court of appeals in test actions brought and successfully maintained by corporations to obtain a construction favorable to them of the corporation tax laws, which decisions not only reduce current receipts by large sums to be credited as refunds of taxes, but establish new rules for future assessments at variance with the practice of the state in the past. Particular reference is made to the definition of "capital employed within this state" as laid down in the case of the Fort George Realty company (179 N. Y., 49) and the construction placed upon the law imposing a tax upon premiums received by life insurance companies contained in the case of the Provident Savings Life Assurance society (179 N. Y., 237).

It was impossible to foresee these decisions, which are a great disappointment and surprise to the state authorities. While it is impossible to make an exact estimate of the shrinkage in revenue and of the amount of the refunds required that will result from this cause, the comptroller estimates the loss at approximately $1,750,000. He further estimates that there will be a shrinkage in the receipts from the transfer tax of $1,000,000, based on the shrinkage of the first two months of the present fiscal year as compared with the first two months of the last fiscal year.

The extraordinary expenses of the present year will necessarily be large. Appropriations to meet the payment of judgments and other claims against the state must be made. We are confronted with a condition which is calculated to cause us to consider with utmost care the problem of adjusting receipts to expenditures. It seems unwise at this time to increase the burdens of taxation. The only alternative is the lowering of expenditures. It is obvious that while, if appropriations are sufficiently conservative, the surplus in the state treasury is sufficient to carry us through another year without increased taxation, a crisis is at hand, and provision should be made to avert it.

Appropriations and Taxation.

Under our system of government the national and state legislatures do not make up single budgets of appropriations, but many special appropriation acts are passed without much regard for the sum total thereof or for the relation it bears to the estimated revenue of the state. The finance committees of the two houses act to some extent as the responsible agencies of the legislature to keep expenditures within the limits of the revenues of the state. I recommend that so far as possible the appropriations for the session be treated as a single act, that the amount thereof be kept close to the estimated indirect revenues for the ensuing year and that they should not exceed $25,000,000. This will call for serious reductions in certain directions without corresponding increases except where the same are imperatively demanded. I am aware that, while economy in the abstract is universally commended, the application of the principle to particular instances is surrounded with difficulties, and I urge upon all interests a patriotic and unselfish consideration of the problem.

Tax Legislation.

The tax on the surplus and undivided profits of savings banks appears in its practical operation to be a tax upon the depositors and is, therefore, contrary to the long established policy of the state to exempt from taxation the savings of those who make use of these banks. The payment of the tax is charged against the current earnings of the bank and is not deducted from the surplus, and it is claimed that the bank is therefore unable to pay the same rates of interest to depositors that it would if the tax were not imposed. A reduction of the interest on these accounts is a hardship to those affected thereby, and I recommend the repeal of the tax. The receipts from this source for the past fiscal year were $730,000, and the revenue thus lost must be made up; but at the same time justice seems to demand that this tax be abolished and that some more equitable method of raising that amount be resorted to.

I also recommend that the law be changed so as to meet the criticisms made by the court in the tax cases above referred to, in order to secure to the state the revenue which it will otherwise lose if these decisions are allowed to stand.

Census.

The constitution of the state (article 3, section 5) provides that an enumeration of the inhabitants of the state shall be made under the direction of the secretary of state in the months of May [illegible] 1905 a complete enumeration, by the state, shall be made, and 1915 the same, and every ten years thereafter a complete and accurate enumeration of the inhabitants of the state shall be made in such manner as the legislature may direct.

The value of a complete census is undoubtedly great, but such a census would cost at least $600,000, while a mere enumeration could be had for about $250,000. Considering the extensive work that is done by the federal government at the present time in taking the census under the permanent census bureau, whereby comprehensive statistics as to matters of public interest are collected and compiled, I am of the opinion that the state should conduct the enumeration at this time at the lowest possible cost consistent with accuracy and thoroughness. I recommend that proper legislation be immediately adopted in order that the secretary of state may be ready to begin active operations in the field at the earliest date possible.

Insane and Charities.

The management of the state hospitals for the insane, fourteen in number, with a total number of patients on Oct. 1, 1904, of 25,019, was completely centralized by legislation of 1902, abolishing the boards of managers of the various hospitals and leaving with the commission in lunacy complete jurisdiction, both as to financial control and internal administration. The advantages of centralized control of the financial operations of the hospitals are evident. It is of the utmost importance, however, that this great system of hospitals, involving the expenditure of so large a sum of money annually and the care of so many thousands of peculiarly unfortunate and defenseless persons, should rest upon a broad basis of public interest and public confidence and should retain the co-operation of philanthropic citizens throughout the state. In my opinion this can best be secured by leaving the control of all financial matters, as at present, in the hands of the commission and by providing for each hospital a board of managers, in general charge, through the superintendent, of the internal affairs of the hospital.

The present overcrowding of the state hospitals, the large increase in the number of the insane each year and the expiration next September of the lease of the buildings now occupied by 1,200 patients at the Long Island State hospital at Flatbush make it imperative to take action during the coming session for a material enlargement of state hospital accommodations. This can probably best be met in part by additional accommodations in existing hospitals and in part by the establishment of a new state hospital. In increasing the accommodations in existing institutions the importance of providing for each state hospital a building especially adapted to the treatment of acute insanity should always be borne in mind.

It is not the duty of the state to maintain in the state hospitals for the insane at the expense of the state any insane person who has property or who has relatives legally chargeable with his support who are able in whole or in part to pay therefor. While the attorneys for the various state hospitals have in many cases been able to collect the charges for support of inmates from the persons and property liable therefor, no effective check is placed upon the commitment as dependent insane of those who are not properly state charges. The rapid growth in the population of the insane hospitals since the adoption of the state care act is not entirely due to the increase in insanity in the state, but may to some extent be attributed to the practice of commitment of senile or feeble minded relatives to the state institutions at the instance of those who are properly chargeable with their support. I recommend that before any insane person is permanently received as a state charge the question be judicially investigated and determined whether such person is a pauper without relatives chargeable with his support and able to contribute thereto. The crowded condition of the state hospitals would, in my judgment, be relieved if they were maintained strictly as institutions for the pauper or dependent insane. Mild cases of insanity in a purely technical sense, due to old age or other cause, where there is no more need for state treatment than in other cases of illness, should so far as possible be excluded from the state hospitals and the patients cared for in the home or elsewhere as persons afflicted with other diseases are cared for.

The most urgent need in connection with the state charitable institutions appears to be that of additional accommodations for the feeble minded at the institutions at Newark and Rome. A substantial increase in the capacity of these institutions would make possible a transfer of many adult inmates from the School For Feeble Minded Children at Syracuse and the reception there of many feeble minded children who cannot now be accepted. The additional accommodations at Newark and Rome should be sufficient to provide also for the admission of many feeble minded adults now in county poor houses.

Great progress has been made during the past few years in improving the reformatory system of the state and in providing proper buildings and equipment for the best reformatory work. With this end in view the commitments of girls to the house of refuge on Randall's island and the State Industrial school at Rochester has been discontinued, and the former house of refuge for women at Hudson has been converted into a state training school for girls. The State Industrial school at Rochester is being transferred to a country site, and a commission has been appointed to select a new site for the boys' department of the house of refuge on Randall's island.

It would seem that some additional safeguards should be provided looking toward more public competitive bidding in the purchases made by the hospitals and state charitable and reformatory institutions either by amendment of the law or by some set of rules and regulations to be adopted pursuant to statutory authority granted therefor. Purchases wherever possible should be made in bulk and in large quantities and from the lowest satisfactory bidder after public advertisement for bids.

I recommend that all appropriations to enlarge or improve the state charitable and reformatory institutions be included in one bill with such provisions as will in every instance insure the most careful and economical expenditure of the moneys appropriated.

I also recommend that suitable legislation be enacted to enable the state board of charities to transfer in proper cases inmates from one charitable or reformatory institution to another where it appears that such persons more properly belong in an institution of the state other than the one to which they were originally committed. Different classes of defectives should not be allowed to remain in the same institution if by a proper system of transfers they can be so distributed as to receive the best and most scientific care.

Adult Blind.

Attention has been called by my predecessors to the fact that no provision is made by the state for the instruction and employment of the adult blind. I recommend that the legislature continue to consider the advisability of devising suitable means for the industrial training of this class of unfortunates.

The expenditures from the state treasury for the last fiscal year for charitable purposes were upward of $7,600,000, and of this amount only $82,225 was expended for the blind, and then only for the education of blind children and youths. What nobler charity can the state maintain than that which aims to enable those who have become blind after reaching manhood to be self supporting!

Election Reforms.

It is the duty of the state so to guard [illegible] by the voters can be obtained. In the larger cities colonization, intimidation and false registration are the principal crimes against the franchise. Laws for the punishment of these offenses have already been enacted. Proper means for the detection of such crimes, however, have not been provided. In the smaller localities the general acquaintance which exists among the residents insures sufficient protection against illegal voting, but in the larger centers of population more perfect methods of identification should be provided. The law now provides that upon offering his name for registry the elector shall state the place from which he voted last. I would suggest that in addition to this he should be required to state the time when he voted last. In the large cities the principal colonization frauds are perpetrated from lodging and furnished room houses. I would recommend that provision be made for reports from these houses similar to those made by hotels under the liquor tax law to the state excise department. This might be effected under a licensing system at a nominal fee based upon the number of beds and might be placed under the direction of the state department of health, which now has some authority over such places.

Further means of identification of naturalized citizens should be provided for in the registry books so as to require either an absolute statement of the time of naturalization and of the court which performed the act or the production of the naturalization papers themselves, so that the election authorities could verify the statements thus made. Too much latitude has been permitted in this direction in the past. During the last election it was discovered that great numbers of alleged naturalized citizens had no right to vote, either having been imposed upon or having been parties to the attempted frauds. The naturalization laws of our state are much more effective in guarding against such abuses than are the United States laws. One of the principal methods of securing fraudulent naturalization papers has been for the holder of legal papers to apply for duplicate papers and then to sell such duplicate papers to persons not entitled to possess them. The law should be amended in this direction so that duplicate naturalization papers could be procured only upon an order of the court, entered after a due presentation of the facts as to the lost certificates. This whole subject of further guarding the elective franchise is commended to your consideration, and I hope that such laws may be enacted as will more effectually guard the purity and integrity of the ballot.

I recommend to the consideration of the legislature both the extension and restriction of the right to vote at special tax elections in cities of the third class to those residents whose names shall be on the assessment roll, without limitation as to sex. If the right to vote at tax elections is to be limited to property holders it would seem but an act of justice to extend that right to women property holders as well as to men.

Canals.

The bids on six test contracts for parts of the work on the 1,000 ton barge canal seem to warrant the belief that the entire construction can be completed within the engineers' estimates of the probable total cost of the work. It is gratifying to know that this great expenditure, ordered by an overwhelming popular vote, will probably prove adequate so far as concerns that portion of the entire cost set apart in the estimates for construction, and it is to be hoped that the estimates of damages for taking of property will prove to be equally accurate.

The enlargement of the canal system of the state will be carried out to a considerable extent by the canalization of the rivers and other navigable waters of the state. It seems important at this time to call attention to the fact that the United States government has expended yearly in the United States for river and harbor improvements vast sums of money, of which the state of New York has received but a trifling percentage as compared with the percentage which the commerce of New York bears to the total commerce of the United States. In the past twenty years the United States has expended nearly $300,000,000 in river and harbor improvements, of which less than 7 per cent has been expended in the state of New York. It would seem proper that the senators and representatives of the state of New York in the national congress be memorialized by the legislature to press the claims of this state for larger appropriations for the improvement of natural waterways in connection with the canal system of the state.

The constitution of the state (article 7, section 8) prohibits the sale of the Erie canal, the Oswego canal, the Champlain canal, the Cayuga and Seneca canal or the Black River canal and imposes upon the state the perpetual management of the same. Whenever it appears that any portion of the canal system has so far survived its usefulness as to make its maintenance by the state a burden with no corresponding benefits the legislature should submit to the people the proper constitutional amendment to permit the abandonment of such portion.

The Black River canal from Boonville north is now practically an abandoned waterway, serving no useful purpose except to those employed to manage it under the constitutional mandate above referred to. I therefore recommend that so much of said canal be leased, sold or otherwise disposed of and that the question be submitted to the people for their determination.

Good Roads.

Without increase in the estimated revenues of the state for the ensuing year, appropriations for good roads must be modest in amount, pending the action of the legislature and the people upon the proposed constitutional amendment permitting the issue of bonds for the improvement of the highways. The attention of the legislature to this amendment is commended.

The highways that are to be improved under the proposed plan should constitute a reasonably complete system of land intercommunication, otherwise we shall simply have patchwork. Provision should be made for the proper maintenance of the improved highways after their construction. They should be kept in repair at the expense of the locality, under the supervision of the state, and I recommend the adoption of legislation which will provide for that result. I also recommend that the contracts for building the roads require that the contractor shall maintain the same for at least five years after acceptance by the state engineer. I strongly urge upon the legislature the importance of placing the execution of this plan of improved highways under special expert supervision under the direction of the state engineer and surveyor and of developing the same in accordance with an approved system, to the end that the money expended may not be wasted, but may result in permanent and useful improvements.

Banks.

The whole number of state banks of deposit and discount engaged in business Sept. 30, 1904, was 186 against 190 at the corresponding date in 1903. Their resources amounted to $443,487,307, which was an increase of $75,873,962 from the corresponding date in 1903. The surplus and undivided profits of these institutions at the same date were $34,087,797, a gain during the year of $1,366,684.

The savings banks of the state at the date of the last report carried 2,406,669 open accounts. Their total resources were $1,575,188,167, which is a gain of $63,-[illegible] over the previous year.

The number of trust companies reporting on July 1, 1904, upon eighty. From July 1, 1903, to the ensuing January there had been a decrease of more than $100,000,000 in the combined assets of these institutions, which had been altogether recovered on July 1, 1904, with over $60,000,000 besides, making the total resources of these companies on the last named date $1,208,450,930. Their combined surplus and undivided profits at the same date were $144,345,580.

The aggregate resources of all the institutions subject to the banking department at the dates of the last reports by them were $2,988,602,422, or $181,233,853 more than at the corresponding dates in 1903.

Restrictive legislation guarding the rights of the depositor and protecting him from loss caused by unsafe banking should be enacted and enforced. The list of securities in which savings banks may invest the money of their depositors should be extended only with the greatest caution and upon the most satisfactory evidence that the added line of investments is one that is safe and conservative not only for savings banks, but also for trust funds. Special legislation enumerating the authorized investments should be superseded by a general law establishing proper standards of safety. Savings banks should be, if possible, limited to their original purpose of benevolent institutions organized to hold and invest the savings of small depositors, and the use of such institutions should be denied to people of wealth who are capable of managing their own affairs and who make large deposits therein for investment purposes only.

Investment associations and concerns should be brought more strictly under state control, and such concerns whenever operating under unsafe and vicious systems should be suppressed.

Bank directors should be compelled to make periodical examinations of the books of their institutions and should be held responsible for the thoroughness and sufficiency of such examinations. Building and loan associations should without exception be prohibited from loaning their funds upon second mortgage. The superintendent of banks should be directed by law to examine at least once in every six months the books and securities of all banks and trust companies.

The attention of the business world is again attracted to the evil results of unrestricted loans by banking institutions to favored individuals so that the solvency of the banks and the safety of depositors are made to depend to a large extent upon the financial integrity of a few borrowers. Safe banking requires that liabilities to the bank be distributed in number and restricted in amount. The provisions of the national bank act limiting the total liabilities for money borrowed by any person to 10 per cent of the amount of the paid in capital stock of the bank are to be commended. I recommend that, with reasonable exceptions as to the discount of strictly business or secured paper, the similar provision in the state law be amended by fixing the amount to be loaned to the individual borrower at not more than 20 per cent of the capital stock actually paid in.

Insurance.

The volume of business conducted by the corporations, companies and societies under the supervision of the insurance department has materially increased. The total amount of risks in force at the close of the last calendar year, including life, fire and marine insurance, was $37,501,282,659. It is obvious that the state owes a duty to its citizens who invest their money in insurance to this vast extent to exercise proper supervision and control over the companies doing business within its limits. No insurance company, association or fraternal order that fails to meet its obligations in full within a reasonable time after they accrue should be allowed to do new business.

Excise.

The total gross receipts under the liquor tax law for the period beginning May 1, 1903, and ending April 30, 1904—the statutory liquor tax year—amount to $17,797,642.84. This is an increase of $5,210,942.52 over the receipts for the previous year. The state's share of the liquor tax for the year ending April 30, 1904, amounts to $9,200,560.59, being an increase of $1,694,057.25 over the previous year. The localities show an increase of $516,855.27 in the receipts for the year ending April 30, 1904, over the receipts for the previous year.

During the year ending April 30, 1904, 28,829 certificates were issued as against 30,144 for the previous year, being a decrease of 1,315 certificates, or 4.3 per cent.

The estimated total gross receipts for the year beginning May 1, 1904, and ending April 30, 1905, are $17,900,000.

The right to determine by popular vote whether trafficking in liquors shall be permitted in a locality is now limited to the towns of the state. It is, in my judgment, worthy of the consideration of the legislature whether this right of local option should not be extended to cities and the divisions thereof.

Education.

Unification of the educational system is established. The new organization is in good working order. The unfortunate controversies which existed under the dual system have been happily terminated.

The growth of our school system during the past ten years has been marked, as appears from the following statistics:

Ten years ago there were 11,778 school districts in this state employing 25,414 teachers and registering 1,083,226 pupils. The average daily attendance of these pupils was 668,097 and the expense of maintaining the schools was $18,922,246.

According to the last complete report there are 11,726 school districts, a decrease of 52; 34,453 teachers employed, an increase of 9,039; 1,256,874 pupils registered, an increase of 173,648; a daily average attendance of 928,335, an increase of 260,238; a total expenditure for school purposes of $41,418,096, an increase of $22,496,850.

Ten years ago the state paid toward maintaining these schools, exclusive of aid given to high schools, $3,712,353. Under the last apportionment state aid amounted to $3,970,555, an increase of $258,203. From these two groups of figures it appears that the aid given by the state to the schools has not kept pace with the growth of the schools. Ten years ago it amounted to $3.42 per pupil; the last report shows that it amounted to $3.16 per pupil, or a decrease of 27 cents per pupil.

Included in the above figures for ten years ago were 285 high schools maintained at an expense of $1,686,860. These schools employed 1,158 teachers and registered 29,668 pupils. The last report shows 636 high schools, an increase of 351; 3,506 teachers, an increase of 2,348; 81,108 pupils, an increase of 51,440; amount expended, $5,007,055, an increase of $3,320,195. The state aid given to high schools ten years ago amounted to $79,297; the amount so apportioned in the last report is $336,025, an increase of $221,128, or about 300 per cent.

Ten years ago the state rendered aid to the public high schools to the extent of $2.66 per pupil; last year this amount was $3.53, an increase of 87 cents per pupil.

Ten years ago there were 39 academies in the state employing [illegible] 2,212 members and instructing [illegible] students with an expenditure of $[illegible]. The last report shows 119 academies, an increase of 80; 8,821 members of the [illegible], an increase of 1,659; 39,734 students, an increase of 17,885, and expenditures amounting to $10,061,269, an increase of $[illegible].

Ten years ago there were 1[illegible] academies employing 1,[illegible] structing 12,121 pupils, with an [illegible] of $1,141,422. The last [illegible] private academies, an [illegible] ploying 1,388 teachers, an [illegible] instructing 13,988 pupils, [illegible] appropriations thereto [illegible]

These private academies ten years ago amounted to $17,956. The amount so apportioned in the last report was $22,332, an increase of $4,374.

Child Labor.

New York is in advance of most of the states of the Union in the matter of legislation on the subject of child labor. The law, however, is not rigidly enforced, and the lack of proper legislation in neighboring states makes it difficult to establish proper restrictions upon the work in this state. Uniformity of legislation on the subject of labor is a matter which should be strongly urged by the state of New York, in order that the condition of women and children may be ameliorated throughout the country and in order that the industries of the state may be relieved from the unfair competition of those states which place no restriction upon the subject. The place for children of school age is in the school, and they should not be withdrawn therefrom or allowed to work in any way which interferes with their school attendance before they reach the age at which primary education ordinarily ends.

Agriculture.

The liberal appropriations made for the state department of agriculture, the agricultural experiment station at Geneva, the College of Agriculture and the Veterinary college at Cornell university, the state fair and the county and town fairs, indicate the fostering care which the state exercises over the development of its agricultural interests.

The functions of the state in this regard should be twofold—first, educational, whereby conditions are aimed at which will insure a uniform high standard for agricultural products in this state, whereby the ravages of disease may be prevented and checked, whereby improved methods of cultivation and production may be introduced and whereby the farm, the dairy and the orchard may be brought to their highest state of productivity; and, secondly, protective, whereby the prevention and detection of the sale of adulterated food products are sought. The value of this work depends upon the thoroughness and skill with which it is done. The work of the state department of agriculture is far reaching in its character. Its effectiveness depends largely upon the care and precision with which the statutes are drawn under which its duties are executed. I especially recommend to your consideration the report of the commissioner of agriculture in this regard.

Prisons.

The laws relative to penal institutions and prison administration and to the method of dealing with criminals have undergone radical changes in this state in recent years. Penologists still maintain that our prison laws are largely anomalous and antiquated and they urge the adoption of a system of state control for all state offenders, the extension of the parole system, the enlargement of the reformatory idea and other changes looking toward a more consistent and scientific treatment of the subject. I recommend to the legislature the consideration of this problem and the wisdom of adopting more modern methods when the finances of the state will permit. I also recommend that some provision be made for the transfer from penal institutions of imbeciles and idiots committed thereto to other state institutions where they may receive proper treatment.

State Architect.

The state architect reports that he has had for some time past an average of 150 contracts, large and small, in force at one time and scattered all over the state. For the past year or two appropriations have been given his office covering the services of but four regular inspectors. It is obvious that these four men can by no means cover the ground. The interests of the state should not be permitted to suffer by reason of insufficient inspection, and in my judgment such interests can be so far promoted by thorough and careful inspection as to save to the state more than the amount of the salaries paid for proper supervision of the work done under building contracts.

The law should give the state architect ample time to prepare plans and specifications for public buildings. He should not be expected to have completed plans for any important work prepared in less than six months after the appropriation therefor is made.

Public Buildings.

The superintendent of public buildings again calls attention to the inadequate office space contained in the state buildings and to the fact that the state is hiring offices for certain departments for which there is no room in the state buildings. The suggestion is made of the removal of the department of education, including the state library, from the capitol to a separate building to be constructed for its accommodation. The superintendent also again calls attention to the unsatisfactory condition of the plumbing, heating, lighting and drainage of the capitol, and I recommend that careful attention be given to his report on this subject.

Civil Service.

The constitution of the state provides (article 5, section 9) that "appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state and of all the civil divisions thereof, including cities and villages, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, so far as practicable, by examinations, which, so far as practicable, shall be competitive."

The civil service law provides specifically for the classification of the civil service of the state and the civil service of the various cities of the state, but provides only in general terms that the state civil service commission may from time to time extend the classification to the other civil divisions of the state wherever practicable. This discretionary power has been exercised in but one instance, when, in June, 1900, the classification was extended to the county service of New York, Kings, Queens, Richmond and Erie counties.

The counties of Albany, Monroe, Onondaga and Rensselaer contain cities of the second class and have a population of upward of 150,000 each, with the exception of Rensselaer, which has a population of 121,697. The following counties also have a population of upward of 100,000 each: Westchester, 183,375; Oneida, 132,800; Orange, 103,959. In these counties are institutions for the care and confinement of the delinquent and dependent classes and public offices where the rule of the constitution can well be applied.

In the smaller counties of the state, where the employees are few in number and where the fee system prevails, there is difficulty in applying the merit system effectively, but in these larger counties there seems no reason why the merit system should not profitably be extended to comply with the mandate of the constitution.

The Society For the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents in the city of New York maintains a house of refuge for juvenile delinquents on Randall's island. While it is a private corporation, the managers being elected by the members of the society, yet children are committed to such house of refuge by the courts and the state appropriates annually a large sum for the maintenance of such juvenile delinquents.

The officers and attendants of the Randall's island institution are paid by the corporation out of funds received from the [illegible]. Such employees are about 114 in number, and their payrolls for the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1904, amounted to $[illegible]. The society is essentially a state [illegible] and the civil service provisions [illegible] employees as a c[illegible] the further receipt of state aid.

Public Health.

The best methods of preventive medicine and public hygiene should be adopted by the state and the civil divisions thereof. Germ diseases may be classed as preventable diseases, particularly those that are caused by the contamination of the water supply. All sources of public water supply should be examined and analyzed by the state commissioner of health as rapidly as possible and at frequent intervals. The private water supply of public resorts should also be subjected to state analysis, and the results should be made public. I recommend that the legislature devise a system of state inspection of domestic water supplies, to be maintained at the cost of the municipalities, corporation and private owners affected thereby.

The growing demands for additional water supplies in the greater cities and for adequate supplies of pure and wholesome water for domestic purposes in other municipalities indicate that in the not distant future the problem of water supply for municipalities will be a most serious one. It seems doubtful whether all centers of population can continue indefinitely to rely upon a natural supply of pure and wholesome water without recourse to artificial methods of purification. The question presents itself whether it is not feasible to develop some plan whereby the municipalities may be insured a water supply at a minimum cost under state supervision through state conservation of the waters of the Adirondacks and other sources. The legislature of 1904 enacted a law creating a water storage commission which has for its object practically the conservation of water for power purposes. A state commission having also for its object the supply of water to the cities might be of great service.

Fish, Game and Forests.

The forests and streams of the state should be made attractive places of resort for the invalid and for those in search of wholesome recreation in the open air. To this end the fish, game and forest laws should be strict and consistent. The preservation of the wilderness and the restocking of the waters of the state with food fish, and the protection of game should, in my judgment, be encouraged, not only for the benefit of our own people, but for the purpose of attracting to our state the ever growing army of sportsmen and pleasure seekers.

The policy of the state toward the extension, preservation and control of the forest preserve demands careful attention, and I shall at some later date communicate to you by special message my recommendations on that subject, whereby I hope to be able to outline a more comprehensive and consistent treatment than would be proper within the limits of this message.

United States Deposit Fund.

The comptroller in his report of 1903 states that "this trust fund under the state finance law is included with the common school and literature funds as a part of the education fund, by article 4 of that statute, but is managed pursuant to provisions applied to no other fund or class of investments for public moneys, with results and tendencies so unsatisfactory that a change of method seems imperative for the preservation of the fund and for the advantage of the citizens entitled to the benefits contemplated by the original acts under which the money was accepted by the state."

The United States deposit fund is distributed in the care of 122 loan commissioners, two in each county. It is loaned on real estate mortgages on improved lands worth double the amount applied for, exclusive of buildings. With the lapse of sixty years the benefits to be derived from distributing loans of small amounts in remote districts have become legendary and the method proves to be antiquated, expensive and inefficient for the purpose. During the past fiscal year the fund suffered a diminution from losses on foreclosure of mortgages and other causes of $169,212.70. The law requires that transfers be made from the general fund to maintain the principal of this fund intact. The annual net income from the fund for the year ending Sept. 30, 1900, is stated by the comptroller to be less than two-tenths of 1 per cent. The average net rate of interest on loan commissioners' mortgages since the year 1895 is 2.2 per cent. During the same period the net rate of interest received on municipal bonds held by the comptroller is 3.75 per cent. At the close of the year 1902 the state owned approximately 18,000 acres of land acquired through foreclosure of loan mortgages, upon which the rents collected for that year were less than 1 per cent of the cost of the land to the state. The acreage from this source is constantly increasing, much of it unsalable or only to be disposed of at heavy loss. The tendency appears to be that this trust fund will become an annual charge upon the taxpayers instead of an aid unless some remedy is provided. I therefore recommend that the present system of investments be changed and that the fund be held and managed under the supervision of the comptroller's office in some such manner as the common school fund and literature fund now are held and managed.

Tenement House Law.

The court of appeals has finally upheld the constitutionality of the only part of the tenement house law of 1901 which has been contested in the courts. This measure is one not only of charity, but also of justice; not only for the benefit of the poorest families, but also for the general welfare of the community. For its enactment and enforcement my predecessor is entitled to the highest credit. The law is now definitely established. Large sums of money have been expended under it, and it would seem to be of the utmost importance that no change should be made in it except where the necessity therefor is apparent.

Preservation of Places of Scenic and Historic Interest.

The preservation of historic objects or picturesque places in the state should be encouraged. The beautiful and wonderful features of natural landscape should be protected from disfigurement, and places and objects identified with the history of the state should be saved from obliteration. It does not seem necessary that the state should expend large sums of money for this purpose, but it should aid by legislation wherever possible the protection of natural scenery and encourage the work of those associations which are organized for the purpose of commemorating historic events and marking points of historic interest. Legislation which seeks to promote the improvement of cities and villages by the adornment of their parks and thoroughfares and which compels the removal of the unsightly and disfiguring from public places should be enacted.

Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis.

New York state participated with success in the great exposition which has just closed at St. Louis. The exhibits of the state received suitable recognition in the awards made by the exposition authorities. The grand total of awards to this state was 559. The supremacy of the state in many of the departments in which exhibits were made was demonstrated. The work of the commissioners was performed with zeal and discrimination and reflects credit upon the state. I desire to renew the recommendation of my predecessors that laws, so far as possible, be general in their application and that the unnecessary multiplication of statutes be avoided. The constitution of this state in terms prohibits many classes of special acts, and the spirit of the constitution and of our institutions demands the application of the principle of equal rights to all and special privileges to none.

I commend to your thorough study the reports of the various departments which are about to be submitted to you. They contain much that is of high value and great interest to the student of governmental affairs. It is impossible in the limits of this message to extract therefrom more than the broadest generalizations. The work of [illegible]

SEWER BOND COMPLICATION

Attorney Caldwell Expresses Opinion That City is Now Bonded to Full Extent Permitted By Law---City Attorney Mead and Mayor Brooker Interviewed.

It is the judgment of Attorney J. H. Caldwell, of New York City, whose approval of the legality of the issue of bonds is sought by investors, that the city of Fulton cannot issue $30,000 registered Sewer Bonds, because of the fact that it is already bonded in excess of the legal amount prescribed by law.

City Attorney Mead returned from New York City last Saturday and has informed Mayor Brooker to this effect.

It is an extremely unfortunate condition of affairs.

A contract has been entered into by the Board of Public Works with Frank Pigeon for the construction of a sanitary trunk sewer on the west side at a cost of $22,000. In addition $8,000 will be required to cover engineering and inspection ($3,000), land and right of way ($2,000), rock excavation and contingencies ($2,000), legal advertising expenses, printing, etc., ($200), sewer plans and specifications ($800). In all, $30,000, it was estimated, would be required and bids have been advertised for the whole or any part of the proposed bond issue.

It was generally understood by the city officials that the total debt of the city, including the proposed issue of sewer bonds did not exceed $330,550.

Attorney Caldwell, however, has expressed the opinion to City Attorney Mead that the city's indebtedness included all outstanding obligations.

CITY ATTORNEY MEAD SUGGESTS A REMEDY

"After an extended interview with Attorney Caldwell in New York," said City Attorney Mead recently, "the conclusion has been reached that the City of Fulton is now bonded to the full extent permitted by law.

"The present condition of affairs is indeed deplorable and at present there does not seem to be any solution of the problem.

"The bonds certainly cannot be sold without the approval of Mr. Caldwell, and, in addition, the officers who would issue them would be personally liable.

"The present indications are that unless some intervention can be brought about through an appeal to the State Board of Health because of the necessity for sewers for sanitary reasons, the city cannot incur one dollar of additional bonded indebtedness at this time.

"In the meantime I have advised Mayor Brooker to instruct the contractor to stop work until some understanding is arrived at regarding the feasibility of obtaining the necessary money for its completion."

MAYOR BROOKER STATES THAT RIGID ECONOMY MUST BE PRACTICED IN EVERY DEPARTMENT AND DELINQUENT TAXPAYERS MUST SETTLE.

Mayor Brooker stated that he was surprised to learn of the decision reached by Attorney Caldwell, but his letter seemed logical and, conclusive.

In reply to an inquiry regarding the city's financial condition, Mayor Brooker said:

"Fulton has gone ahead quite rapidly within the past few years, and while I am pleased with the progress has made, I am also cognizant of the fact that neither a corporation nor an individual can spend more money than it earns.

'Rigid economy must be practiced in every department. I have instructed the Chamberlain not to honor any order on any fund unless there is sufficient money in the fund to pay it.

'There is owing to the city a large amount of taxes; some of the indebtedness dates back three or four years.

"The City Chamberlain," Mr. Brooker continued, "is now engaged in drawing up a complete list of the delinquents and will notify them that unless the taxes are paid within ten days after the notice is received, immediate action will be taken to collect them. It is most unfortunate that the city should be so handicapped for lack of funds.

"When this money is collected it can be applied to the several funds, which are now all depleted, and this will afford some relief.

"A new form of collecting taxes has been adopted. Each taxpayer will receive a notification of the amount of assessment, the rate assessed, the method of assessment, the amounts raised for the several funds, and the application of the charter as to the payment of the taxes. This has never been done before. In my judgment it is a business method and will save the taxpayers the annoyance of running to the Chamberlain to make inquiries.

"I am most anxious to inform the people of this city regarding the exact condition of affairs. The electors have reposed confidence in us and they are entitled to a full account of our stewardship. As far as I am concerned the affairs of the city will be managed with the same regard to economy as would be practiced in a private business enterprise and a supreme effort will be made to keep expenses within reasonable limits."

ATTORNEY CALDWELL'S LETTER

The following letter has been received from Attorney Caldwell by City Attorney Mead. It is a concise statement and shold be read by every taxpayer.

I have just received an affidavit from the Chamberlain as follows:

"That the total indebtedness of said city, exclusive of bonded indebtedness, and exclusive of amounts borrowed in anticipation of taxes already levied, is as follows:

Certificate of indebtedness dated August 1, 1902.....	$653 25
Certificate of indebtedness dated September 7, 1904	10,621 36
Orders drawn by the Board of Public Works to Robert W. Henson, contractor on First street improvement, during the year 1902, four in number, aggregating.....	10,653 57

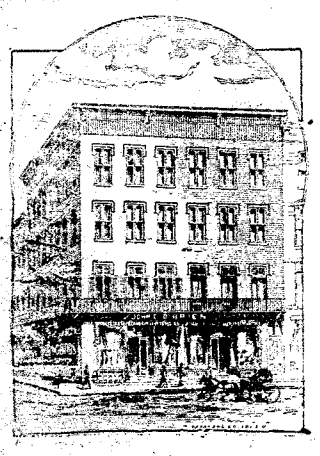
That all the above are held by the First National Bank of Fulton, N. Y., and that all of said amounts represent the share of the cost of street improvements assessed against the abutting property owners, as yet unpaid by said abutting owners to the city."

This affidavit, you will observe, does not state the amount of certificates issued in anticipation of taxes already levied, nor give any facts in reference to the same so as to show that they come within the exception above referred to. On its face, therefore, this affidavit shows an indebtedness of the city aggregating $21,928.18 in excess of that shown in the affidavit first submitted to me, and that the proposed Sewer Bonds would, therefore, exceed the Constitutional debt limit. In other words, taking the two affidavits together, the statement would be as follows:

Bonded indebtedness.....	$300,550 00
Other indebtedness	21,928 18
Total	$322,478 18
Add to this, proposed issue.....	30,000 00
Total	$352,478 18
Debt limit.....	335,995 50
Excess over debt limit	$16,482 68

The language of Art. viii. Sec. 10 of the Constitution, as to the exception above referred to, is as follows:

"This section shall not be construed to prevent the issuing of certificates of indebtedness or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes for amounts actually contained or to be contained in the taxes for the year when such certificates or revenue bonds are issued and payable out of such taxes."



The Chamberlain's affidavit, as stated above, does not give the amount of the certificates issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes, or show the other facts necessary to bring them within this exception. As to the certificates issued in anticipation of the collection of assessments for benefits, they are in no respect revenue certificates or revenue bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes, and I fail to see any theory upon which they may be lawfully deducted from the gross debt under this section.

It is not quite clear from the last affidavit of the Chamberlain (verified Jan. 5, 1905) whether the statement therein that "all of said amounts represent the share of the cost of street improvements assessed against the abutting property owners, as yet unpaid by said abutting owners to the city," refers only to the last item, to-wit.: "Orders drawn by the Board of Public Works to Robert W. Henson, contractor on First street improvement, during the year 1902, four in number, aggregating $10,653.57," or to all of the items in this statement. If it was expressly provided in the contract between the city and the contractor for the improvements, that the city should not be liable for the contract price or any part thereof, on account of said work, except to the extent that it collected the assessments for the same, and if the so-called certificates of indebtedness and orders issued or drawn against these assessments contained a clause limiting the liability of the city exclusively to the fund derived from the assessments, in that event it is quite probable that the certificates and orders would not constitute an indebtedness of the city at all, and it would not be necessary therefore to include them in a statement of the city's indebtedness within the meaning of Art. viii., sec. 10 of the Constitution. The Appellate Division in the Fourth Department, in the case of Kronsbein vs the City of Rochester, 76 Appellate Division, page 494, has so held. If you think that the facts in your case are such as to bring you within the scope of this case, I will be very glad to go farther into it with you. The debt statements sent me, however, indicate on their face that the proposed bonds would be in excess of the Constitutional debt limit, and I could not therefore give an opinion that they would be legal.

I have telephoned the United States Mortgage & Trust Company not to send out the circulars (which are printed and ready for distribution) until further notice, because of course I could not have the statement go out that I had approved the legality of the bonds.

Very truly yours,

A meeting of the Board of Public Works will be held this evening to take action in regard to the foregoing.

REMINISCENCES OF A FAMOUS SPELLBINDER

Thrilling and Interesting Episodes on the Road During Political Campaigns—Traits and Peculiarities of Men Who Have Become Famous as Public Speakers.

By CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW

The campaign orator, or spellbinder as a recognized American institution. Whether he be President of the United States or a candidate for the office, a distinguished statesman of many years in public life, a young lawyer who adopts this method of securing attention and clients, and always, of course, the candidate who can stand on his feet and talk for five minutes. His talents are as varied as those of the actors on the dramatic stage. There is the tragic, the solemn, the serious, the amusing, the anecdotal, the humorous, and the witty speaker. The orator will find that while one audience is delighted with his style, another audience may think him a bore or a trifler. I spoke many times with one gentleman, a very able lawyer and who reached high distinction in politics, who, while he was very successful with juries and before a court, had the reputation of being able to empty halls quicker than any other living man.

At the Republican National Convention in 1888 the New York delegation urged my candidacy for President, and I was voted for for several days. When I withdrew, our strength went to General Harrison and secured his nomination. Under the circumstances it seemed necessary for me to make unusual efforts for his election. In many months on the platform in this and other States I met most of the speakers and was also active with the speakers' bureaus of both the national and State committees. I heard every orator, in recounting his triumphs to the bureau chief, emphatically remark, "I held my audiences spellbound." The canvass was interesting because it followed the success of Mr. Cleveland in 1884. When it was over the committee gave a dinner for the speakers and appointed me to preside. In selecting a name for the affair I hit upon "The Spellbinders' Banquet," and from that the word "spellbinder" was coined, which has become a permanent part of our political vocabulary.

The campaign orator who is a good speaker is handicapped when billed with a statesman whose lofty position marks him the star. It takes this statesman usually from an hour and a half to two hours and a half to deliver his ideas, and when the orator comes on he finds a tired audience which will not laugh at his jokes and wants to shut up his eloquence. The worst experience the spellbinder can have is to be sent out to fill the appointment of some famous person. The local committee will treat him with insult and inhospitality. In my younger days I suffered keenly from this experience. The drawing card in 1863, when I ran for Secretary of State, was Governor Andrew, the war Governor of Massachusetts. Something happened to Andrew, and I was sent to fill his place. My first appointment was at Deposit, at a mass-meeting of four counties. I had been six weeks on the stump and looked like a tramp. An angry and badged committee pranced up and down the platform looking for Governor Andrew. I stood there with a bandless hat and a shawl over my shoulders and finally said to a committeeman, "Governor Andrew could not come, and they have sent me." He looked me over, threw up his hands and shouted: "Fooled again by the State committee! Governor Andrew can't come, and they have sent us this!" I did not tell them that I was running at the head of the ticket, and when they were so informed by Daniel S. Dickerson, who arrived later, it did not relieve their groans, nor did their enthusiasm and compliments after I had spoken relieve mine.

George A. Sheridan was one of the best stumpers. He was to speak one night in Cleveland. He was singularly gifted in argument and illustration, and especially in anecdote. After he had been talking about ten minutes the blind orator, Professor West, came upon the platform. The chairman interrupted Sheridan and said: "The blind orator has come out of the sick-room, and wants to say just a few sentences and go back to bed." Sheridan said, "Certainly," and sat down. The blind man talked three hours. When Sheridan resumed, he said: "Fellow-citizens, I hope you brought your night-dress with you, for I feel very ill myself."

The most successful and powerful platform speaker I ever heard was Wendell Phillips. His audiences were always hostile. His method was by vitriolic attacks upon public men who were popular idols, but pro-slavery, and also upon the Constitution because it fostered slavery, to arouse the crowd to a point of fury where he had to be protected by the police—then, with an eloquence that was simply marvelous, when the audience was tired of yelling and hissing, he would subdue, capture, and turn them into shouting enthusiasts. I have never known any one else capable of doing that.

When I took the stump it was two years after I was graduated from college, and George William Curtis was the platform orator. His slavery question, which [illegible] and his boyhood, [illegible] on a very lofty and [illegible] Curtis possessed singularly [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and

ANDREW CARNEGIE'S gifts during his business career now amount to $101,488,633—a fabulous sum. He enjoys the distinction of being the only man in the history of the world who has given so much and with such good judgment. MAYOR BROOKER URGES ECONOMY.

Mayor Brooker is determined that the most rigid economy shall be practiced in the administration of the affairs of this municipality. That is right, and the resolution is in strict accord with his pre-election pledge. Progression is not a crime, but it is extremely injudicious for a municipality or an individual to spend money in excess of income. Improvements are necessary but they are expensive, and when ordered must be paid for. Street paving can not be obtained unless a majority of property owners first request it, which, according to the charter, amounts to a demand on the Board of Public Works. The complication over the issue of sewer bonds is to be regretted, and Mayor Brooker and the Board of Public Works are now endeavoring to solve the problem, which means that an equitable adjustment will be reached. As a sanitary measure and in compliance with a provision of the charter, it became imperative to begin their construction. West side residents are impatient for the completion of the work, and it is hoped their ambition will soon be realized.

Guilford A Smith Writes the Times.

Editor Times: Enclosed find money order for which please send me The Times for 1905. A friend recently sent me a copy nd it started thoughts of former days in my native town. My father, Samuel Smith, came to Volney in 1814, and went from Oswego Falls, (then the Upper Landing) to the home of his brother, Josiah Smith, now the Sixteenth school house, by marked trees. I was born four miles east of Fulton in 1829 and my early recollection of the place was as a very small village; the principal merchants in which were Almon, Wilson, Churchill, Cooley and Charles Tucker. Years later came D. W. Gardner, Dyer, Seymour & Carrington and others. Now these firms are but a name. Horace and Newell H. Gilbert were schoolmates of mine—many others whom I recall have passed over the river. I have many friends in Oswego county where I taught music for seventeen years in most of the towns, coming to Michigan in 1870.

Fulton has forged ahead during the past 35 years, until it is now one of the most prosperous and progressive cities in the Empire State.]

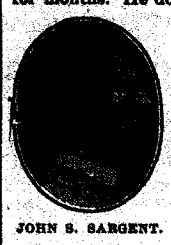
People of Note Who Are In the News



The members of the international commission which has assembled in Paris to investigate the Dogger bank affair are all men of exceptional knowledge of maritime law as well as naval affairs in general. The Russian member of the commission, Admiral Nicholas Kaznakoff, has held important commissions in the naval service of Russia and is regarded as one of the ablest officers in that branch of the czar's fighting forces. He is of judicial temperament and conciliatory manners and disposition.

Admiral Kaznakoff is remembered with pleasure in America, to which he paid a visit at the time of the Columbian exposition. Particularly good feeling between Russia and the United States existed at that time. Admiral Kaznakoff was in command of the squadron which was sent to America in honor of the Columbian anniversary. He acquitted himself in such a manner as to enhance the good feeling between the two nations. When the Russian warships were anchored in the Hudson river at New York the Farragut Association of Naval Veterans of the port of New York paid Admiral Kaznakoff a visit on his flagship, the Dimitri Donskoi, and made him a member of the society, presenting him with the handsome gold medal of the association. Rear Admiral B. S. Osborne was master of ceremonies for the Americans, and in responding to his remarks Admiral Kaznakoff was much affected. He embraced Admiral Osborne and kissed him, according to the Russian custom, on both cheeks and on the forehead. "I cannot kiss you all," he said, "but I do so in feeling." He touched his hand to his cap and gave an order. A gun was fired, the Russian flag fluttered from the mast, the American veterans uncovered their heads and the Russian sailors cheered. The ceremonies over, the Americans were royally entertained in the cabin of the flagship.

ADMIRAL KAZNAKOFF.

Artists are proverbially poor, but here and there is an artist whose professional success has made him very rich. One of these fortunate few is John S. Sargent, upon whom the world's fair at St. Louis recently bestowed high honors. Some of the greatest artists have lived and died poor men. Jean Francois Millet, for instance, could paint great pictures, but he hadn't the capacity for getting rich. Sargent is said to make from the sale of his paintings about twice as large an income as that of the president of the United States. Yet he is not mercenary. He could make more than $100,000 a year if he would take more commissions. But there comes a time every year when he refuses to open any more letters from persons who want their portraits painted, flees from his admirers and remains away from his studio for months. He does not push himself. In fact, he is modest to the point of bashfulness. Some time ago the papers published an item to the effect that Sargent's "little son" was to be page to the queen at the coronation ceremonies. This caused him much embarrassment, as he has no son and is a bachelor and, though much admired by the fair sex, is too bashful, his friends say, ever to make a proposal of marriage.

JOHN S. SARGENT.

Sargent is spoken of as an American artist. As a matter of fact very little of his life has been spent in America. He was born in 1856 in Florence. As a fellow artist once wrote, "His fairy godmothers seem to have divined that he was to become a great artist and saw to it that his eyes should get their first glimpse of the world in one of the most beautiful of the shrines of art." His parents were Americans, tracing their ancestry back to the earliest colonists. He was educated in France, and his studio has been for many years in London. Yet there is an American atmosphere about his work that is held to justify his classification as an American artist. Sargent is passionately fond of music. He turns from his easel to his piano, and his command of musical art seems almost equal to his mastery of that of the painter.

The Hon. William E. Chandler, secretary of the navy under President Arthur, relates this incident of Assistant Surgeon Ver Mulen. The story, as printed in Harper's Weekly, runs as follows:

That officer was six feet four inches in height, a fact that occasioned him much discomfort when he was serving on the old Penobscot, the height of the vessel between decks being only five feet eight inches. As Surgeon Ver Mulen considered the matter he remembered that long letters to the navy department were not always given that prompt attention he thought should be afforded in the present instance, so he determined to approach the authorities in a manner novel enough to insure them with the gravity of the matter he addressed his superior officer in this wise:

The Honorable the Secretary of the Navy:
Sir—Length of surgeon, six feet four; height of wardrobe, five feet eight. Respectfully. E. C. VER MULEN,
Assistant Surgeon, U. S. N.

Shortly after the navy department detached Ver Mulen "until such time as a more suitable ship could be found for his assignment."

Representative John James Jenkins of Wisconsin is one of the Republican members of the committee from the house of representatives which is to conduct the prosecution of Judge Charles Swayne in the impeachment proceedings in the senate. Mr. Jenkins was a laborer in the pine woods of Wisconsin about thirty years ago. He was born in Weymouth, England, in 1843, and in 1853 his family came to the United States and settled in Wisconsin. His educational opportunities were limited, but he studied law and was admitted to the bar, was elected to the Wisconsin legislature, served as a county judge and also as United States attorney in Wyoming, then a territory. He is now serving his fifth term as representative of the Eleventh Wisconsin district in congress. Representative Jenkins served in the Union army in the civil war and made a fine record. When General Fitzhugh Lee was at the capitol one day not long since he was introduced to the Wisconsin legislator by a friend.

REPRESENTATIVE JENKINS.

"I saw you once a good many years ago," said Mr. Jenkins. General Lee remarked that he did not recall the event.

"It was near Brandy Station," continued Mr. Jenkins. "You were riding at the head of a column of men, mounted on a gray horse and wearing a black plume in your hat.

"You didn't see us," added Mr. Jenkins. "You didn't even know the Yankees were near. We were posted out in the woods, and as I saw you riding by I aimed my musket as carefully as I could and fired. I was much chagrined then to note that you rode on, your black plume still waving, but I am very glad now that the bullet missed its mark."

General Lee, too, expressed his gratification that Jenkins on that occasion proved a poor marksman, and the two adjourned to the senate restaurant, where the battle of Brandy Station was fought over again.

Henry H. Rogers, the Standard Oil magnate who has been discussed so much since Thomas W. Lawson "wrote him up" in a magazine, is a man who rules other financial kings with ease. Speaking of his habits at meetings of corporations with which he is connected, Mr. Lawson writes:

H. H. ROGERS.

"Surrounded though he be by the elite of all financialdom, the very flower of the business brains of America, you will surely hear his sharp, incisive, steel clicking 'Gentlemen, are we ready for the vote? For I regret to say that I have another important and unavoidable meeting at ——.' [illegible] time he mentions is twelve or at the most fifteen minutes away. There is no chance for discussion. Cut and dried resolutions are promptly put to the vote, and off goes the master to his other engagement, which will be disposed of in the same peremptory fashion."

Serious business man though he is, Mr. Rogers now and then indulges in a joke. The New York Times relates that some time ago he was visited by one of his friends, who had been under the weather for months. Mr. Rogers inquired after the health of his caller.

"I have been staying down at Lakewood, N. J., for six months," was the reply, "and I've been pretty low—in fact, I never was in so bad a state before."

The big financier, thinking of his travels in copper mine districts, smiled and asked quietly, "You've never been in Montana, have you?"

A Dreaded Quilt.

Queen Victoria was an expert and indefatigable knitter. During the Egyptian campaign she and the ladies of the household employed themselves in knitting quilts, which at the end of the war were sent to Netley hospital for the use of the wounded. One of these, made entirely by her majesty and bearing an elaborate V. R. in the center, was the coverlet par excellence of the institution and in universal demand for a time. In assessing the claims of the candidates for the honor of sleeping upon it the medical staff naturally gave the precedence to the most severely wounded, and as the most severely wounded was the one most likely to die very soon, alas, an evil omen attached itself to the distinction, the climax of which was reached one night when a poor soldier, feeling something touching his bedclothes, woke up with perspiration pouring down his face and cried out, "Oh, sir, do anything you like with me, but for God's sake don't give me the quilt!"

Royal Pleasantry.

Duke of Tilbury—Where were you when the king fell off his horse? Duke of Hokeham—Oh, I was near the throne.—Pittsburg Post.

Something to Address.

A German grocer, newly arrived in New Orleans, opened up a downtown establishment. He got along fairly well for awhile, but soon all his customers ceased coming.

Meeting one of them on the street one day he inquired the cause.

"Because you don't give lagniappe," was the curt reply.

"But what is dot lagniappe?" he persisted.

"Oh, simply a custom here. When one buys anything at a grocery store the clerk or proprietor usually gives lagniappe—that is, a little something in addition."

"Och, dot is it, eh?" replied the grocer reflectively and went his way.

The next customer who came in was served by him in person.

After the package was tied and handed over the counter the grocer said suddenly:

"What is der sum of sixteen hundert unt forty-seven unt eighteen hundert unt nine?"

"Why, whatever do you mean?" cried the astonished purchaser.

"Why, dot's your lagniappe—a leetle something in addition, aindt id?"

The grocer shop closed the following week.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Library Book Thieves.

"No public library is safe from book thieves. In the big libraries they have spotters to watch men who ask for rare editions, but in the small libraries we must depend on the girls employed who happen to detect a thief by chance. If possible we catch the book thief before he reaches the door and ask him if he has not forgotten to have the volume checked off at the registry desk. If he is an old hand he says:

"'I have forgotten my card, but I will bring it around tomorrow.'

"He hands back the book and disappears to reappear in that particular library no more for many months. The majority of book thieves do not steal novels. They go after works of reference, almanacs, year books and such things, that most of them probably need in their business, but cannot afford to buy. That is why such volumes are nailed down in many libraries. I have actually known a woman to get away with a city directory under her cloak."—New York Press.

Natives of the San Blas Coast.

The natives of the San Blas coast, part of the western coast of South America, have many peculiar customs. The Indian boy after his marriage becomes the slave of his father-in-law and must submit in all things to his will until emancipated by his own daughter's marriage, when he sets up his own home and becomes thenceforth master of his son-in-law. The men are very jealous of their women, and in case of war or other grave danger their first step is to kill their wives and children. They believe dreams and insanity to be the work of evil spirits, and the dreamer upon telling his dream is killed. The insane are burned alive. They allow no foreigner to sleep in one of their villages.

A Famous Aqueduct.

One of the most imposing architectural relics of western Europe is the aqueduct of Nismes, in southern France. After the lapse of sixteen centuries this colossal monument still spans the valley, joining hill to hill in nearly perfect state. The highest range of arches carries a small canal just wide enough for a man to creep through and still retaining a thick lining of Roman cement. The height of the structure is 188 feet and the length of the highest arcade 872 feet. Its use was to convey to the city of Nismes the water of two springs twenty-five miles distant.

A Right of the British Navy.

The British navy since the time of Alfred the Great has claimed the position of being "first among equals" and has maintained this position to the present day. It is acknowledged by the navies of the world in the fact that on meeting a British man-of-war they first salute, the courtesy being returned by the British ship. The Dutch resisted this demand until 1675 and the French until 1704, since which date it has been an item of international law.

"Ye" For "The."

"Ye" for "the" is not now and never was a proper form of expression. The word "ye," as it appears in all old books and legal documents, should always be pronounced as "the," the "y" being only a corruption of the thorn letter, a symbol which stood in place of "th" and which was formerly used by printers when difficulties were experienced in "spacing out."

Obtuse.

"Pa," said little Willie, who was struggling over his lessons, "what is an obtuse angle?"

"An obtuse angle," replied his father, "is an Englishman to whom you try to explain a joke."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Awkwardly Expressed.

Newlywed—You bachelors are foolish. Now, when a married man gets a few dollars saved up he doesn't go and spend it on some woman he admires. Bachelor—Doesn't he? Newlywed—No. He buys something for his wife.

Both Wrong.

"He offered her his hand and his fortune."

"Did she accept?"

"No. The first was too large and the second too small."

An Alternative Theory.

She—It's no use talking— Her Husband—No, it is not. But I suppose you do it merely from a sense of duty.—New York Press.

The labor of love leads to love of labor.—Chicago Tribune.

When Lee Resigned.

In "Recollections and Letters of General Lee," by his son, Captain R. E. Lee, a new light is thrown on the great commander at the time of his resignation from the United States army. In a letter to his sister he says:

"With all my devotion to the Union and the feeling of loyalty and duty of an American citizen, I have not been able to make up my mind to raise my hand against my relatives, my children, my home. I have therefore resigned my commission in the army, and, save in defense of my native state, with the sincere hope that my poor services may never be needed, I hope I may never be called on to draw my sword. I know you will blame me, but you must think as kindly of me as you can and believe that I have endeavored to do what I thought right."

That he really did not expect to fight is shown by the following extract from a letter to his wife: "I do not know what my position will be. I should like to retire to private life if I could be with you and the children, but if I can be of any service to the state or her cause I must continue."

Circumstantial Evidence.

Sir Henry Hawkins, a brilliant advocate and one of England's greatest criminal judges, expressed the following opinion in his "Reminiscences."

"Let me say a word about circumstantial evidence. Some writers have spoken of it as a kind of 'dangerous innovation' in our criminal procedure. It is almost the only evidence that is obtainable in all great crimes and it is the best and most reliable. I have witnessed many great trials for murder, but do not remember one where there was an eyewitness to the deed. How is it possible, then, to bring home the charge to the culprit unless you rely on circumstantial evidence?

"Circumstantial evidence is the evidence of circumstances—facts that speak for themselves and that cannot be contradicted. Circumstances have no motive to deceive, while human testimony is too often the product of every kind of motive."

Fish That Change Color.

Anglers have noticed that fish of the same species caught in the same stream often differ completely in color and take protective hues that match the prevailing local coloring of their homes. Herr Otto Gotthilf found by a course of experiments with turbots that this faculty of changing color in accordance with the surroundings is primarily due to the action of light upon the optic nerve. The light does not act directly upon the eye, but is reflected from such substances as are around and affects the coloring cells through the nerve centers of the fish. Proof of this was obtained by severing the optic nerve of the turbot, when it was found that it no longer possessed the power of changing color.—Punch.

Limbs Badly Swollen.

Dr. M. M. Fenner, Fredonia, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—About 4 years ago I began to suffer with severe pains in my back making it impossible for me to do any work.

My limbs were swollen badly and I was troubled with an affection of the heart also, all coming as I suppose from Kidney trouble.

I had tried several Kidney remedies with little result, not satisfactory.

I asked Mr. Dorrence, the druggist who handles your goods here and he recommended your Kidney and Backache Cure saying he had sold it for several years very successfully.

I took 4 bottles and the swelling has all gone from my limbs and my heart trouble completely cured.

I have recommended this Remedy to a large number of my acquaintances, with the same result.

I will gladly answer any letter from any one.

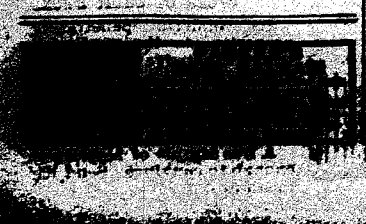
The Debts of Millet.

The father of M. Casimir-Perier called on Corot one day and found him in the act of finishing a picture. "A masterpiece!" exclaimed the visitor. "I must have it."

"It is yours," promptly replied Corot, "if you will agree to pay the butcher and baker bills of my illustrious but poor friend, Jean Francois Millet."



"Agreed," said the patron, well pleased. The bills were presented to him, and they amounted to nearly $6,000, neither butcher nor baker having been paid for twelve years.

Cured His Mother of Rheumatism.

"My mother has been a sufferer for many years from rheumatism," says W. H. Howard of Husband, Pennsylvania. "At times she was unable to move at all, while at all times walking was painful. I presented her with a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and after a few applications she decided it was the most wonderful pain reliever she had ever tried, in fact she is never without it now and is at all times able to walk. An occasional application of Pain Balm keeps away the pain that she was formerly troubled with. Sold by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

His Idea of a Lady.

An English cabman had brought suit against a woman for not paying the legal fare, and his constant remark was, "She ain't a lady." "Do you know a lady when you see one?" asked the judge. "I do, yer honor. Last week a lady gave me a sov'rin instead of a shillin', and I called out, 'Beg pardon, madam, I've got a sov'rin instead of a shillin',' and she shouts back, 'Well, you did find, keep the change and get drunk with it!' That's wot I calls a lady!"

The Clergyman's Hobbyhorse.

Visitors to a quaint little church in England observe a curious relic in the shape of a high stook with a leather top like a saddle. The parish clerk shows not a little pride in this relic and tells its story with relish. During the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the country parsons were accustomed to spend much of their time hunting with their country squires. Oftentimes the fox got more attention than the sermon on the following Sunday. Such was the case with the parson who left the saddle stool behind him as a relic of the days of fox hunting parsons. He was a good deal more at home in the saddle than in the pulpit, so in order to introduce some of the life and spirit into his discourses which he felt while in the hunting field, the reverend gentleman had this saddle stool made. It was placed in the pulpit before the parson mounted the steps. Once astride this hobby the parson was able to reach a much higher degree of enthusiasm and eloquence than he could have unmounted.

The Mechanism of the Salmon.

A salmon is marvelously adapted to the conditions amid which it lives. It can cleave through tons of water falling perpendicularly, yet its fins and its tail, which seem to hold the propelling power, are not less fragile than the wings of a bat. It can be killed without injury to its contour, and a plaster cast of it can be made, yet no mechanism can devise an instrument which will lie in the water and move as it does, and no theory of dynamics has explained either its postures in the water or its motion. Simple in its organization as it seems, its movements are as inimitable by any human contrivance as the flight of a bird has proved to be.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Absolutely Harmless.

English Superstitions.

At Dawlish, in Devonshire, England, they ring the church bell during a thunderstorm to scare away the lightning. Lancashire agricultural laborers credit certain of their fellows with power to cast good and evil spells. At Dunstable men carry a live snail in a pill box to ward off toothache, eat stewed earthworms as a cure for jaundice and fried mouse for whooping cough and cherish all the old superstitions as to the dead which made Merrie England sad.

Cal-cura Solvent, Dr. Kennedy's NEW Medicine, Did More than Many Doctors.

Your pocketbook as well as your health needs consideration, but often both suffer through ignorance of the right thing to buy. That was the case with the gentleman who wrote the following letter:

Three bottles of it cured me of spells of heart trouble and terrible pains in the side, back and head. Am better than for many years."—H. J. Reardon, Fourth Street, N. Y.

Useless Mental Machinery.

One who has been employed these thirty years in dissecting brains as bookkeeper, salesman, etc., tells me: "To say that butchers are hard hearted is far from the truth—that is, in most cases. Let me explain how the shedding of human blood affects them. I once saw a butcher cut his hand severely, and not one of his twenty or more associates could be induced to go near to assist him. I had to bandage him up as well as I could and send him to a hospital. Another butcher who had helped slaughter from 2,000 to 4,000 hogs a day for years saw a woman throw herself before a freight train, which mangled her fearfully. He promptly fainted. I have seen more than a hundred fights at slaughter houses, but never yet saw a butcher attempt to use a knife."—New York Press.

Nerves in Rebellion

are quickly brought back to duty by Vernal Iron Nerve Food Tablets. The way to reach the nerves is through the blood. These tablets are blood food, and therefore they rebuild nervous vitality when it has been torn down by work, worry or other causes. As there is no health without sound nerves, the usefulness of these tablets cannot be overstated. By stimulating the digestive tract, correcting disorders of the urinary system, strengthening the heart-action and quickening the circulation, they transform pallid, peevish invalids into strong, buoyant-spirited men. Rid yourself of nervous debility with this remedy, and you are not likely to take cold. Don't give up, no matter how long you have been feeble, despondent and wretched. Vernal Iron Nerve Food Tablets are sold by all druggists at 50 cents a box, or by mail. Sample Free. Address, Vernal Remedy Co., LeRoy, N. Y.

A Roman Butcher's Shop.

The Museum of Antiquities at Dresden has an interesting marble relief from Rome which represents an ancient butcher shop of oblong shape divided by a pillar into two unequal parts. In the greater stands the butcher, with a high chopping block resting on three substantial legs before him, while behind him hang the steelyard and a cleaver, he himself being occupied in dividing a rib of meat with another cleaver. On the wall above him, just as with us, is a row of hooks near to each other, on which hang pieces of meat already dressed—a rib and a leg of meat, a pork joint and udders (a tidbit of the Romans); also lungs and liver, and last of all the favorite boar's head. On the left, in the smaller division of the shop, the wife of the butcher sits in an easy chair, with an account book on her knees, engaged in assisting the business of her husband by acting as bookkeeper.

Contracted Chronic Diarrhoea While in the Philippines.

"While with the U. S. Army in the Philippines, I contracted chronic diarrhoea. I suffered severely from this terrible disease for over three years and tried the prescriptions of numerous physicians, but found nothing that did me any good until I tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, two small bottles of which entirely cured me and I have since had no return of the disease."—Herman Stein, 212 N. Pairing In Parliament.

The custom of pairing is quite unknown to the forms of parliament itself. Any mention of it within either chamber would be altogether out of order, but there is a pleasant fiction that it is a purely private arrangement to be made at the discretion of those concerned. This is true enough to a limited extent and for a short time, but pairing on any great party division cannot be lightly carried out, and a member who desires to pair at such a time will find that this can only be done safely through the whips and not at all unless some really good reason can be given for absence.—London Times.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy the Best Made.

"In my opinion Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best made for colds," says Mrs. Cora Walker, of Porterville, California. There is no doubt about its being the best. No other will cure a cold so quickly. No other is so sure a preventive of pneumonia. No other is so pleasant and safe to take. These are good reasons why it should be preferred to any other. The fact is that few people are satisfied with any other after having once used this remedy. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Get Out of the Rut.

It is never best to travel in a rut. It is wearisome. It is nerve destroying. Wise people choose the smoother road, or if that road must be traveled they try to fill up the ruts with stones and gravel. There is such a thing as getting out of the rut, and the world would be better and happier if more of us did it.

Woman's Visual Angle.

"Have you eyes in the back of your head?" asked a country magistrate of a woman, and the woman promptly replied that she had. She was perfectly right. Take any average man and any average woman, question them as to the dress and deportment of the people in any assembly where they were together, and you will find that the woman has seen more than the man, for woman has been compelled to enlarge the angle of her vision and to see all around her hat without shifting an eye.

From an early age instinct tells the girl, and convention seals the instinct, that she must not look directly at the man in the street, therefore the honest woman walks through London looking straight ahead. The direct look at the stranger is forbidden, yet human curiosity compels, so develops and enlarges that angle of vision, for no woman will deliberately blind herself, and therefore by continual exercise those calm conventional eyes that look to the horizon and the infinite have trained themselves to see the world out of the corners—obliquely.—London Chronicle.

Be Ready For the Opportunity.

People are apt to think that, though their actual lives are poor and self centered and such as they are half ashamed of, if some great crisis arose they would be able to gather up their halting will and raise themselves to its height. Yes, no doubt. Only life's sternest calls never come in any such fashion. Things don't arrange themselves for us to gather up our feeble will and settle with our souls that we will be heroes. They come hardly and sharply, testing not what we have resolved to be, but simply what we are. We have a sort of feeling that it is the opportunity that makes the man. Not so. The opportunity only shows him for what he is, and the spirit of prompt duty, of quick, instinctive loyalty to right under whatever temptation may ever come, may be cultivated and grow to the very capacity for heroism even in life's lowliest place and poorest work.

Every Two Minutes

Physicians tell us that all the blood in a healthy human body passes through the heart once in every two minutes. If this action becomes irregular the whole body suffers. Poor health follows poor blood; Scott's Emulsion makes the blood pure. One reason why is such a great aid is because it passes so quickly into the blood. It is partly digested before it enters the stomach; a double advantage in this. Less work for the stomach; quicker and more direct benefits. To get the greatest amount of good with the least possible effort is the desire of everyone in poor health. Scott's Emulsion does just that. A change for the better takes place even before you expect it.

We will send you a sample free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

Better Than a Shoehorn.

"Here is something I learned from an Englishman I met while at a friend's house," said a lawyer. "The house was in the suburbs, and we were occupying the same room. I found I had forgotten to bring a shoehorn and asked the Englishman if he had one. 'No, I haven't,' he said. 'Why don't you use a towel?' 'A towel? I replied. 'Yes, a towel. Here, let me show you. Take a corner of the towel, so; lay the point in the heel of your shoe, so; put your foot in as far as it will go, right on top of the towel. Now, grab the towel diagonally up in it. Pull hard, and your foot slides in like a shot.' And it was better than a shoehorn."

SIX HUNDRED DOLLARS IN PRIZES

The Fort Stanwix Canning Company last Spring offered $600 in cash to the patrons of the factory who should secure the best yield from a given number of acres of corn, tomatoes and beets. This generous offer was highly appreciated by the farmers in this locality and they made strenuous effort to reap a heavy harvest. The weather conditions were not propitious, but the fact that the acreage was not always as large as better climatic conditions would have secured, did not prevent the Fort Stanwix Company from paying the money in full to the successful tillers of the soil.

The Fort Stanwix Canning Company is one of our most important industries. They not only pay out an immense sum of money in wages each season to boys, girls and women, but they also pay a liberal price for the vegetables and fruits which they purchase, thus aiding the residents of this locality for many miles around. A higher standard in the quality of the articles grown is another advantage which producer and consumer alike enjoy. It is doubtful if a discouraging word is heard from the company's patrons, so uniformly fair are they in all their dealings. Fultonians should be proud of the fact that our home grown vegetables adorn the best tables in the land, as the local company sells to the best wholesalers—Park & Tilford, New York City—in the face of the keenest competition from other manufacturers, and at a higher price than that asked for other samples submitted.

WEALTHY MAN'S SON ELOPES WITH POOR GIRL.

John W. Francis, Son of Ex-Alderman J. H. Francis, Told to Do What He Chose With Xmas Gift, Goes to St. Louis and Weds.

[Chicago Examiner, Dec. 29.]

When former Alderman Joseph H. Francis, 5710 Ontario street, presented his son John with a $100 bill Christmas morning he requested him to spend the money just as he chose.

John did. He bought a wedding ring and two tickets to St. Louis, and if society circles are astonished by the elopement of John W. Francis with Miss Julia Gill, 315 North Park avenue, both of whom are nineteen years old, there is no way to express how the young man's father felt when he heard the news.

Mr. Francis spent the day looking for his son, and discussed his disappearance with Mrs. Gill, who was equally anxious about her daughter. Late last night the following telegram was delivered at the Francis residence:

J. H. Francis, Chicago

Julia and I are married. Will be home in a few days, if agreeable to yourself. JOHN.

A family consultation was immediately held and it was agreed to forgive and welcome the elopers. Here is the answer sent to the telegram:

John W. Francis, St. Louis.

Received your telegram announcing your marriage. Come home with your bride and everything will be made pleasant for you.

J. H. FRANCIS.

Miss Gill is a telephone operator in the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Building at Fifth avenue and Adams street. Young Francis was frequently seen in her company, but there was never any thought that they were contemplating marriage.

The young man left his home Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock, taking a suburban train for Chicago. Miss Gill was also a passenger in the car.

The young husband is in the employ of his father, who publishes a financial magazine in the Oxford Building on Dearborn street.

"This marriage is a great shock to the family," said a friend of former Alderman Francis, last night. "They discussed what was best to do for several hours. Finally the father concluded to forgive his son and the couple will be given a splendid welcome when they return from St. Louis."

Miss Gill is a remarkably pretty girl. The Francis family is one of the wealthiest in Chicago, but the circumstances of the young woman are such that she has always been compelled to work for her living.

When the young couple returned to the parental roof, they were given a cordial welcome and will make their home with Mr. and Mrs. Francis for a time, at least. They were met at the station by a company of Mr. Francis's friends with automobiles and escorted to their home in royal style.

Contents of the January Number of the American Boy.

The twelve stories, nearly all of them illustrated, in The American Boy for January ought to make the boys' mouths water. These stories are of great variety, so that every sort of a boy ought to be pleased. There titles are: "Up a limb," a hunting story; "For the Mikado," a Japanese-Russian war story; "The scoop of the bald eagle," a newspaper story; "The President's cadet," a story of General Grant; "Pablo Mariscal," a Spanish-American story; "The wire fences telephone," a farm story; "My four years at West Point," a school story; "Joyce Thatcher's race," a farm story; "The pilot boys of Norway," a sea story; "A race with a stampede," a story of the plains; "Sufficient unto the day," a humorous story; "One of the most glorious deeds ever done by a boy," a story of heroism. Boys interested in mechanics and electricity will find much of interest in this number. As to sport, there is a variety of matter, easily first being a picture of some of the famous amateur athletes of the United States and Great Britain, perhaps the most remarkable group picture of athletes ever taken. There are pen pictures of the Czar of Russia and Senator Fairbanks, a column of boys' books reviewed and one on "Boys who wrote famous books." Three colums are given to "The drawing room magician," and a page each to "The boy stamp collector" and "The boy photographer," nearly two columns to the Amateaur Journalism Department and a full page to puzzles. Soot as a Disinfectant.

Of the many cheap and simple disinfectants proposed for the use of the people one of the most effective is common soot. Soot is composed of pure carbon and is formed by the fat vapor of the hydrocarbon coals from burning fuel striking the cold walls of the chimney or stovepipe and condensing thereon. It is a very light, porous and impalpable powder and, like charcoal, which is the same element in a different form, possesses the property of absorbing and retaining a wonderful amount of gas. The great danger of disease about sewers, drains and other places is almost entirely due to gas given off by decomposing matter. If soot be sprinkled about these places it will absorb the foul gas.—London Mail.

Too Much Imagination.

Pity the man or woman devoid of imagination, but he or she who allows the imagination too great liberty becomes its subject rather than its master. The man who wears a rubber on the pedal attachment to his cork leg because the cork foot aches without the rubber is as unfortunate a victim as the Scotchman who fainted on account of the heat in church the first Sunday after stoves were set up, although a fire had not been lighted in any of them.

Dutch Cure For Lazy People.

The Hollanders are not fond of lazy people, and they have a very good way of curing persons who can but won't work. If a pauper who is able to work refuses to do so they put him in a cistern, to which a pump is attached, and turn on a stream of water. The stream flows into the cistern just slow enough to enable the lazy person by lively pumping to keep the water from getting up over his head.

Real Riches.

"Who is the richest man in the world?" asks an exchange and begins measuring millions against millions. All wrong. The richest man in the world is the one that gets the greatest amount of happiness out of what he has, whatever it is. It is an old truth, but it was never truer than it is today.—Pueblo (Colo.) Chieftain.

A Reminder.

Miss Sue—Really, dear, you mustn't put "I remain ever your loving Nellie Tomkins" You may put "I remain, ever loving Nellie Tomkins" if you like, but underline the "remain" and the "Tomkins." Father's been [illegible] always [illegible] long that one as any other.

The Widow's Cap.

A very ancient origin, dating back to the time of the old Egyptians, has the widow's cap. The Greeks borrowed from the latter the custom of shaving the head and beard in time of mourning. The Romans copied, but, being a smooth shaven people, had only the head upon which to operate. This, when shaved, they covered with a wig. The women did not necessarily shave their heads, but they were careful to hide their hair beneath a cap. The use of crape upon the arm is a naval and military emblem of bereavement, come down to us from days of chivalry, when ladies fair bound scarfs upon the arms of their champions as they went to test their skill and courage in the tournament.

Right Doing.

One's rightful work is often halted by fear of what others will say about it. This may be even more a barrier to the work than the fear of not doing the work at all. It takes courage to do what we believe we ought to do when we think we shall be criticised or misunderstood or scorned. But the real calamity lies in not doing what we ought. Of this it is well to have so strong a fear that we shall have courage to face whatever others may say of our right doing.—Maxwell's Talisman.

Easy Language to Learn.

Mr. George Wyndham, M. P., in his Glasgow address as rector of the university alluded to the story that the Scots who founded the kingdom of Dalriada killed all the men and women who were Picts and spoke their non-Aryan language. "I know that only five words of the Pictish tongue remain," he said. "In an examination which allowed to candidates a free choice from all languages I should select the Pictish language. It can be mastered in one minute."

A Drawback.

"Every time you speak," said the good fairy, "pearls and diamonds will drop from your lips."

"But," faltered the gentle maid, "don't you think that, under such circumstances, pearls and diamonds may become too dreadfully common?"

Progressive.

A man who had kept a hog in his pen for a year sold a half with the [illegible] another pig, and he replied that he supposed he must keep a hog all the time anyway and he might as well keep that one as any other.

THE DISTRICT SCHOOL.

Excellent Portrayal of Characters by Local Talent — Financial and Social Success.

The "District School at Blueberry Corners," which was presented last Wednesday evening in Stephens' Opera House, under the auspices of the Board of Education and teachers of the public schools, was a very decided success. The net proceeds, which amounted to $201.23, will be devoted to the furnishing of the children's room in the new public library building.

Notwithstanding the excellent talent secured to impersonate the characters, a great deal of credit is due Mr. Irving Gilbertha for the very clever manner in which the entire cast was drilled.

Some of the scenes were extremely ludicrous and kept the audience convulsed with laughter from the rise of the curtain until the final scene, when the pupils sang with more volume than sweetness the National hymn.

Prof. J. R. Fairgrieve was an ideal district schoolmaster — dignified and grave, commanding the respect and obedience of the scholars.

Professors Edmunds and Moore, in their recitation of "The Doggie" and "An essay on bones," convulsed the audience.

The school committee, consisting of Richard Carr as "Uriah Perkins," John Hunter as "Jacob Billaker," and Thomas Sullivan as "John Smith," were a most enjoyable feature. The examination of the applicants for the responsible position of principal of the school, were characteristic. Mollie G. Cavanaugh as "Miss Dashaway," Anna E. Hartigan as "Miss Belinda Sharp," Katherine B. Holloran as "Miss Simple" and James R. Fairgrieve as "Hezekiah Pendergrass," gave excellent portrayals of the characters they impersonated.

Those who impersonated country school girls were the Misses Anna E. Hartigan, Katherine B. Holloran, Marie La Porte, Jessie R. Bradley, Mayme E. Breads, Jean Giffillan, Mollie G. Cavanaugh, Mary Phillips, Mae E. Taber and Eva Waugh. The impersonations of the several characters by the young ladies were received with continuous applause. This was especially true of Miss Breads's burlesque of "Curfew must not ring tonight."

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DROWNING.

George P. Wells Slips from Icy Plank into Raceway and is Carried By Swift Waters 300 Yards Before He is Rescued.

While Mr. George P. Wells, the vice-president of the Granby Paper Company, was superintending the removal of ice from the flume of the Granby Paper mill, at a point where it crosses over the Fulton Paper Company's tail-race, last Saturday, he slipped on an icy plank and fell into the raceway. So swift was the current that before Mr. Wells arose to the surface he was carried under the flume and about 300 yards down the raceway. One of the workmen who witnessed the accident called loudly for help, and hurried down the river bank. A rope was secured and thrown to the drowning man, which he was able to grasp firmly enough to be drawn ashore.

Dr. H. L. Lake was summoned and after restoratives were applied the patient was taken to his home on Cayuga street.

Mr. Wells' escape from death was indeed miraculous. He is most highly esteemed in this city and his death would have brought sorrow to a large circle of friends and acquaintances. The shock has been sufficient to confine the patient to his home, but we are pleased to state he is now progressing toward recovery.

On the road home his hold on the reins suddenly relaxed and he fell forward in the cutter, dead. His death is attributed to heart disease. The deceased is survived by his widow and one daughter, Mrs. Henry Childs, of St. Paul, Minn.

Phoenix Visited By Burglars.

Burglars entered the Phoenix bank on Friday night through a rear window, drilled a small hole through the fire and burglar-proof safe, but did not succeed in getting the door of the safe open. Nothing was missed in the bank, though all the drawers were opened and ransacked. Oscar E. Ward's jewelry store, adjoining, was also entered, the burglars forcing the front door with a jimmy. The show cases were ransacked, jewelry and fountain pens taken, but the safe was not tampered with. Mr. Ward is unable to tell the exact amount of his loss, but believes that it will not exceed $100. A horse and cutter belonging to A. W. Hawks was also stolen, with which the burglars drove to Syracuse, and the police of that city captured the horse, sleigh and driver the next day.

No Indictment in Case of Mrs. Battles

No indictment has been found by the Grand Jury in the Battles case. Coroner Vowinkle expressed the belief that the deceased was murdered by some person unknown to him. Mrs. Battles' death caused considerable excitement in Scriba last October. She was found dead at the foot of a pair of cellar steps at her home, and a post mortem examination revealed that death was due to strangulation, which, Drs. Stockwell and Baxter testified, could not have been self-inflicted.

STEPHENS OPERA HOUSE.

"Damon & Pythias", Will Be Presented by the Jeavons Company.

In announcing the coming attraction at the Stephens Opera House managers Wallace and Gilmore, hope to have catered to their patrons taste for the highest class of entertainment, and in booking that masterpiece of tragedy "Damon & Pythias," has given us a play about which more has been said, and possibly from which more good has arisen than any other production ever seen upon the stage.

Teaching that great object lesson, Brotherly love, it appeals straight to the hearts of the audience, and from the beautiful language, and realistic scenes depicted, transports them to another sphere in which this great maxim is pre-eminent.

The company, among whom are several names high up in the artistic world, is strong and well-balanced, the stage settings are elaborate, the costumes beautiful, and in every respect correct, nothing is overlooked to make the piece both an artistic and financial success, to those who appreciate such efforts, a visit to the Opera House, next Monday evening, Jan. 23, will prove both a pleasant and profitable evening's entertainment.

The Orchards are Blooming in California

The people are wondering if they are to have a second crop of fruit this year, but whether the fruit matures or not, it is a beautiful sight, and on account of frequent rains the whole State offers unusual attractions. Indications point to an immense business to the Pacific Coast this season. The New York Central Lines offer a variety of routes. Specific information will be freely given by our ticket agents and a copy of America's Winter Resorts, filled with maps and interesting information will be sent free, post-paid on receipt of a 2 cents stamp by Mr. George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, Grand Central Station, New York City.

Women Tax-Payers.

The women of this state, who have been working for the past three years for the passage of a bill allowing women tax-payers to vote at special tax elections in cities of the third cluss, are much encouraged over the strong words of approval uttered by Governor Higgins in his message to the legislature and by Speaker Nixon in his address upon taking the chair as speaker of the House for the seventh time. Governor Higgins said:

"If the right to vote at tax elections is to be limited to property holders, it would seem but an act of justice to extend that right to women property holders as well as to men."

In his address Speaker Nixon said:

"I recommend legislation to permit women tax-payers to vote on all tax propositions, and I believe that every community would be benefited by the votes of such women. They are a conservative, conscientious, patriotic and intelligent class, and the more voters of that kind we have at the polls the better for the commonwealth. They are asking only what is reasonable and right."

Women tax-payers already vote at pecial tax-elections in all the towns and villages of the State and it has been found that they can be depended upon to vote for the uplifting and upbuilding of the community in which they live. Why it is that so many of our representatives at Albany have hesitated in giving women this simple justice is one of the mysteries of legislative halls, and can only be guessed at. It would seem with both the Governor and Speaker of the House so strongly committed to the proposition, there could be little excuse for longer denying women this right.

President Roosevelt Invited To Visit Palm Beach, Fla.

The Tropical Sun of Palm Beach, Florida, has inaugurated a movement to have President Roosevelt visit that place during the month of February. The officers of the Palm Beach Motor Boat Association will extend a formal invitation. Mayor Currie of that city called for a mass meeting of the citizens to consider the project and a large number responded, filling the hall to overflowing. A plan was formulated, in conjunction with the Board of Trade, to invite President Roosevelt to attend the races, which are to be held on Lake Worth during the coming month. Following this action of the City Council, Manager Sterry of the Hotel Royal Poinciana, heartily seconded the move and enthusiastically offered to entertain the President and his accompanying friends in a manner appropriate to the occasion, should the President decide to accept the invitation.

Their Excessive Grief.

Lord Brampton related that once, while he was plain John Hawkins he defended a man for wife murder. The prisoner's two children, dressed in black and sobbing violently, were in court, and their grief and the lawyer's eloquent speech combined to acquit the defendant. That evening at dinner he met an old inhabitant of the neighborhood, who complimented him upon his speech. "However," he added, "I think that if you had seen what I did when driving past the prisoner's cottage last week you would not have painted the home in such glowing colors. The little children who sobbed so violently in court this morning and to whom you made such pathetic reference were playing on an ash heap near their cottage, and they had a poor cat with a string round its neck swinging backward and forward, and as they did so they sang:

"This is the way poor daddy will go,
This is the way poor daddy will go!

"Such, Mr. Hawkins, was their excessive grief."

Bengalese Superstitions.

Among the Bengalese it is said that shouting the name of the king of birds (garunda) drives away snakes. Shouting "Ram! Ram!" drives away ghosts. Cholera that attacks on Monday or Saturday always proves fatal. Cholera that attacks on Thursday never ends fatally. The flowering of the bamboo means famine. In fanning if the fan strike the body it should be instantly knocked three times against the ground. When giving alms the giver and receiver should both be on the same side of the threshold. It is bad to pick one's teeth with the nails. If a snake be killed it should immediately be burned, for all serpents that are so unwise as to permit of having their lives taken are inhabited by the souls of Brahmans, which hope thus to escape and work mischief. The words "snake" and "tiger" should never be used after nightfall. Call them "creepers" and "insects." Never awaken a sleeping physician. Morning dreams always come true.

Women Slaves In Palestine.

In Palestine the mother of men is the servant of men. Being a part of the household chattels, she is sold for as large a sum as her father can extort from the prospective bridegroom. She is a thing, a piece of goods. The father of a firstborn son proudly calls himself after the boy's name, but his girl babe is not reckoned among his children. Her infant shoulders learn to bear the burdens. Her little feet patter their way to the fountain even from the moment their tiny strength can support the weight of the jar. Her whole life is one of grinding, baking, fetching water, waiting upon others. At twelve she is sold into married service. Growing old in middle life, she may see herself supplanted by a younger wife, often being robbed of her sons by the military conscription, and finally she is put away as the last breath is leaving her body.—Corwin Knapp Linson in Metropolitan Magazine.

Trees Which Cause Headache.

A curious member of the vegetable kingdom has been discovered in the far east. It is a species of acacia which grows to a height of about eight feet and when full grown closes its leaves together in curls each day at sunset and curls its twigs in the form of a pigtail. After the tree has settled itself in this way for a night's sleep, like most sleepers, it objects to being disturbed. If touched it will flutter as if agitated and impatient at the interruption of its slumbers. The oftener the foliage is molested the more violent becomes the shaking of the branches, and at length the tree emits a nauseating odor, which if inhaled for a few moments will cause a violent headache.

Stopped the Rain.

In the sixteenth century, it is alleged, there was a successful effort made to stop rain by the use of gunpowder. Benvenuto Cellini tells us in his memoirs that when Margaret of Austria entered Rome it rained heavily. "I pointed several large pieces of artillery in the direction where the clouds were thickest and whence a deluge of water was already pouring; then when I began to fire the rain stopped, and at the fourth discharge the sun shone out."

Would Have Use For His Eyes.

"Want to get off again, do you?" roared the boss. "This will be the sixth time you've been off this week. What's the trouble now?"

"I want to get my eyes examined," sullenly replied the clerk.

"Well, get 'em carefully examined while you're about it. You'll be looking for work after Saturday night."—Pittsburg Post.

The Little Things.

Life is made up of little things—words, acts, duties, pleasures. They come to us one after another, calling us out of ourselves, or seem to rush hurriedly past us, and they leave an impress on our spirit, and our characters are made or marred by their influence.—Rev. B. Lowry.

Took Away Her Opportunity.

"What's the matter with your wife?"

"Oh, I've just acknowledged that I made a fool of myself in lending Hornsteasley $25, and she's mad because there's no chance to go on arguing about it."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Big Difference.

"I hear she is to marry an old fellow with a million dollars."

"The idea is that she's going to marry a million dollars with an old fellow attached."—Philadelphia Ledger.

THIS is the day of the natural waisted woman. The W. B. Erect Form has changed the American figure. It has supplanted discomfort with ease—it has banished the impossible and exaggerated figure produced by the old corset idea. It removes the strain of lacing from the sensitive parts of the body and throws all pressure upon the hips and the strong back muscles, supporting the stomach within the corset and not forcing it below the garment. The Erect Form is made in more models than ever before. There are forty distinct styles of this popular make, each meant for a distinct type of woman. Dealers in all sized towns and cities the land over, sell the Erect Form. Prices range upward from $1.

THE AMERICAN MONTALY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

The more Magazines there are, the more Indispensable is The Review of Reviews

"Indispensable," "The one magazine I feel I must take," "The world under a field-glass," "An education in public affairs and current literature,"—these are some of the phrases one hears from intelligent people who read the Review of Reviews. The more magazines there are, the more necessary is the Review of Reviews, because it brings together the best that is in all the most important monthlies of the world. Such is the flood of periodical literature that nowadays people say that the only way to keep up with it is to read the Review of Reviews. Entirely over and above this reviewing section, it has more original matter and illustrations than most magazines, and the most timely and important articles printed in any monthly.

Probably the most useful section of all is Dr. Albert Shaw's illustrated "Progress of the World," where public events and issues are authoritatively and lucidly explained in every issue. Many a subscriber writes, "This department alone is worth more than the price of the magazine." The unique cartoon department, depicting current history in caricature, is another favorite. The Review of Reviews covers five continents, and yet is American, first and foremost.

Men in public life, the members of Congress, professional men, and the great captains of industry who must keep "up with the times," intelligent men and women all over America, have decided that it is "indispensable."

ople Prominent In the Public Eye

REPRESENTATIVE NICHOLAS LONGWORTH of Ohio has often been mentioned as a prospective son-in-law of President Roosevelt. Whether there is any foundation for the rumor time alone will tell. The other day Longworth, who is only thirty-five, dropped in to see the president.

"Ah, good morning," said Mr. Roosevelt. "And how is the baby congressman this morning?"

"Fine," flashed back Longworth. "And how is the baby president?"

Whereupon honors were held to be easy.

Longworth is a Harvard man, and the president's fondness for men who like himself wear the crimson of the big university at Cambridge is well known. The young Ohio statesman is a lawyer, has wealth, belongs to a great many clubs and is quite a social lion at the capital. He is handsome, well "put up," somewhat bald and polished in manner. He has been intimate with the Roosevelts and has often been seen with Miss Alice, but that popular young lady has many suitors, and Secretary Loeb is kept busy denying rumors of her engagement. Congressman Longworth is fond of athletics and devotes a good deal of time to golf, being amateur golf champion of Hamilton county, O. When he made his maiden speech in the house of representatives it was taken down in shorthand by one of the official stenographers who also plays golf and who prefaced the report in these words: "Representative Longworth teed up his first oratorical ball today and made a pretty drive for 180 yards. He got in trouble in the long grass with his metaphorical iron on the second shot, but came out nicely with a poetical approach and holed down in five with a peroration that gave him bogy."

CONGRESSMAN LONGWORTH.

President Eliot of Harvard, who has given fifty years of his life to educational work in the university, is the subject of many anecdotes which illustrate his almost impulsive generosity. "It is well known," says a writer in the Outlook, "that on one occasion a student, sick with contagious disease and shunned by those about him, was taken into the president's own house. A raw subfreshman from a country village in Connecticut on the evening of his first day in Cambridge found himself in need of a Latin grammar to prepare for the next day's examination. Quite without friends at the university, he told his need to the first man he met and was bidden to the stranger's house. There a long search unearthed a Latin grammar, but it proved to be of too old an edition to serve the present need. By this time the stranger's perplexity and anxiety to get the book exceeded the student's own, and after some thought he sent the young man off with a note to a friend in a neighboring street who might be likely to have the right edition. It was weeks before the student learned that the chance stranger who had given an hour of his time and an even more precious measure of his sympathy to a lonely and troubled student was the president of the university.

CHARLES W. ELIOT.

"In a university that numbers over 4,000 the opportunity for personal touch between student and president is small, but there are scores of stories of the enlistment of the president's personal interest in some student's behalf. There was a young man who desired to study botany, but had failed to satisfy some technical preliminary requirement. The committee which stood between the student and his wish has a vivid recollection of the warmth of manner and the emphatic gesture of the president as he declared, 'If that young man wants to study botany, he shall study it.'"

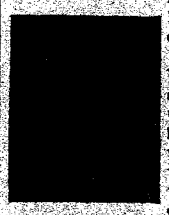
The other day Jesse Overstreet of Indiana, chairman of the house committee on postoffices and post roads, overheard some one talking about persistence.

"Reminds me of what my teacher used to tell me," he said. "She was constantly reminding me of the virtue of persistence. 'You can do anything,' she used to say, 'by hanging on.'

JESSE OVERSTREET.

"'I know one thing,' I told her one day, 'that you can't do by being persistent.'

"'What is it?' she asked.



"'Carry water in a sieve,' I replied triumphantly.

"'Oh, yes, you can,' she said, 'if you wait long enough.'

"'How long would you have to wait,' I asked incredulously.

"'Until it froze,' she replied, and I confessed she had me."

Mayor Seth Low of New York, [illegible] spoken of for one of the important diplomatic posts in the gift of President Roosevelt, has for years been a close friend and trusted adviser of the president. In the preliminary portion of the campaign of 1903 District Attorney Jerome, in opposing Mr. Low's renomination for the mayoralty of New York, asserted that he was lacking in humor. Others denied this and declared that in the intercourse of city officials quarrels and wrangling were often averted by the mayor giving the conversation a humorous turn or quietly interjecting a joke. It is related that when he was president of Columbia university and shortly after he had given a million dollars for its library building a friend remonstrated with Mr. Low for being so generous and told him that if he kept on he would die a poor man.

SETH LOW.

"Well," said Mr. Low, "Mrs. Low and I have talked the matter over. We have no children and we love our relatives too much to provoke them into a contest over my will."

Because he is reserved it has sometimes been said that Mayor Low is cold and unsympathetic, but numerous instances of his thoughtfulness for others and kindness to the unfortunate are held to prove the contrary. When his old grandfather, for whom he was named, lay dying, he sent for the ex-mayor, then a little boy, and as Seth knelt by the bedside put his hands on the child's head, saying, "Always be kind to the poor."

The grandson has carried out this command in quiet ways. Mrs. Low, too, has worked hand in hand with him. Not only money but time and thought have been given to the unfortunate, but their giving has been done in so unostentatious a way that the public knows little of its extent.

The Right Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., LL. D., the bishop of the Episcopal church against whom charges were brought in connection with his deposition of a former presbyter of his diocese, is one of the most popular men in his denomination, being a man of democratic ways and kindly manner who always enjoys a joke or a good story. He labored for eleven years as a missionary bishop in Wyoming and Idaho, visiting mining camps and Indian reservations and "roughing it" according to what fell to his lot. He was born in Fayette, Mo., in 1848, and graduated from Dartmouth college in 1870 and from the General Theological seminary in 1873. In the latter year he was ordained deacon and some months later was advanced to the priesthood, his first and only rectorship being that of St. James, Macon, Mo. He was in charge of this parish from 1873 to 1887, when he was consecrated missionary bishop. In 1897 he was transferred from Idaho and Wyoming to the diocese of central Pennsylvania, of which he is now head.

BISHOP TALBOT.

Some time ago Bishop Talbot deposed from the ministry, after a trial, one of the clergymen of his diocese, Rev. Dr. I. N. W. Irvine, who was in pastoral care of a mission at Huntingdon, Pa. The latter charged the bishop with misrepresentation of his character and caused a presentment embodying such an allegation to be forwarded to the presiding bishop of the American Episcopal church, the Right Rev. Dr. Tuttle of Missouri.

When the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott declared in the Appleton chapel of Harvard university a few days ago, "I no longer believe in a great first cause," his remark was widely quoted and, taken out of its context, created the impression that he had virtually renounced Christianity and belief in a personal divinity. But Dr. Abbott denies this, and that such a construction of his remark is wrong is seen from his statements further on in the same address when he declared: "There is only one energy. That energy has always been working. It is an intelligent energy. No scientist can deny it. It was working before Christ's time even as it is now. For three years the clouds broke and the light flashed through. Then they closed again. Yet God has a personality. We recognize it as we recognize the personality of a Titian or an Angelo. Only God is always working, always creating, whereas their work is done."

DR. LYMAN ABBOTT.

Dr. Abbott says he has preached similar doctrine for the past fifteen years. In illustrating a statement that the Bible is the product of inspiration, but not dictation, Dr. Abbott once said:

"I have a child at home who desires to write a letter to her mother. She asks my help and sits at the table with her pencil or her pen in hand. 'What can I say to mamma?' 'Tell her where you went yesterday,' I reply. 'Oh, yes,' she says, and then she writes, 'I went to a picnic in the woods yesterday with Susie and Mary and Johnny and Tom.' And she works out a little account of the picnic, and then she comes to me again, and I make another suggestion. I tell her now and then how to spell a word. I even occasionally correct her forms of expression and suggest a better method. When finally the letter is done it is her letter, but she has written it under my inspiration. The thoughts are partly mine, but she has made them her own."

AN EXPLANATION WANTED.

Not One Good Reason Found For Denying the Ballot to Women.

It would be gratifying to a great many earnest men and women to hear just one good reason for denying to women a voice in our government, the fundamental principle of which is "consent of the governed," that does not apply with equal force to the disfranchisement of men.

It cannot be her want of physical power, for it does not require any great amount of physical power to cast a ballot or study the questions of the day.

It cannot be her lack of intelligence, for in the United States more women can read and write than men.

It cannot be a lack of moral force, as our prison statistics show that 95 per cent of the criminals confined in jails and penitentiaries are men.

It cannot be because she cannot perform military duty, for two-thirds of the men who do vote are exempt from military duty, and the only class of men who are disfranchised, except foreigners, criminals, idiots and insane men, are the soldiers stationed at our various garrisons.

It cannot be that she is too good, for a just government could not compel its best citizens to be governed by its worst.

It cannot be her occupations, for they are as varied as those of men and would require no more time from the duties of women than those of men.

It cannot be her maternity, for, being the one who must give the soldier to the state and rear the citizen for his civic duty, it would seem specially necessary that she should be a living factor in the government in order to educate him to the highest ideal of American citizenship.

It cannot be because women do not want to vote, for there have been more petitions sent to our United States congress and the various state legislatures asking for woman suffrage than all the other petitions combined, and, furthermore, the women do vote at every election in the states where they have full suffrage in as great a proportion as do the men. The fact that some men do not vote is never made an argument why all men should be disfranchised.

It cannot be because women do not contribute to the support of the government, for they are taxed equally with men for its support.

What, then, is the true reason for this unjust discrimination against the women of this nation?

Is it possible, as a prominent writer has said, that it is due to the selfishness of man, who, having the power in his own hands, reluctantly yields it except by brute force?

ELNORA MONROE BABCOCK.

THE RIGHT TO THE BALLOT

Woman's Claim on the Franchise as Well Founded as Man's.

The press dispatches say:

"Several women in Denver have been arrested charged with selling their votes. Is this the way woman suffrage is purifying politics?"

From this elaborate arguments are drawn showing that women should not be given the right to vote.

If the question of woman's voting was entirely a question of expediency the fraud of a few women might constitute a very weak little argument against it.

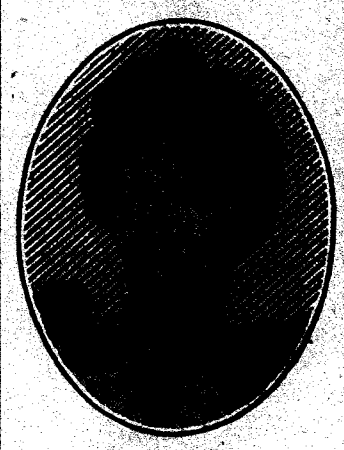
But woman's right to the ballot and man's right to the ballot rest on precisely the same ground. This government is called a democracy. A democracy is a government under which the people make their own laws and choose their own rulers. Men and women are people, therefore men and women have the right to vote.

"Several women" in Colorado sold their votes at the recent election. Several hundred thousand men all over the country sold their votes. If the "several women" in Colorado furnish an argument against woman suffrage, do not the several hundred thousand men furnish an infinitely stronger argument against man suffrage?

We do not disfranchise all men because some men are corrupt. We ought not to disfranchise all women because some women are corrupt. And the purification of politics can be accomplished in no speedier way than by carrying out the principles of democratic government.

CAROLINE HALL.

A Fallacious Argument.



Colorado is in a lawless condition, therefore woman suffrage evidently has done no good. This is now the favorite argument of the antis. They might as well say, "Colorado is in a lawless condition, therefore the schools and churches of Colorado have evidently done no good." They have not done everything, therefore they have not done anything, a highly logical argument. While differing intensely upon other subjects, the one point upon which all factions in Colorado agree is in testifying that woman suffrage is a good thing and is in no way responsible for the troubles. Ex-Governor Peabody has lately written a letter to this effect to an organization of women on the Pacific coast, the Western Federation of Miners passed a resolution indorsing woman suffrage at its annual meeting, and Hon. John L. Shafroth and Governor Alva Adams have publicly expressed themselves to the same effect on occasions too numerous to mention. When people so radically opposed to each other on every other question are all unanimous on this one point we may be pretty sure their testimony is true.

I fully believe that the time has come when the ballot should be given to woman. Both her intelligence and conscience would lead her to vote on the side of justice and pure morals.—Bishop Hurst.

MRS. CASSIE L. CHADWICK.

The Strange Woman Who Has Made a Record in "Frenzied Finance."

The character of Mrs. Cassie L. Chadwick, female exponent of "frenzied finance," has puzzled the public as much as that of any woman who has recently won notoriety. As she is not a youthful woman or especially attractive in person, it is difficult to account for the influence she acquired over the men whom she induced to lend her large sums on securities which proved worthless, thus bringing ruin to their reputations and fortunes.

Mrs. Chadwick is now in jail at Cleveland awaiting trial, having been indicted on numerous counts, among them being charges that she forged the name of the multimillionaire, Andrew Carnegie, to notes aggregating nearly a million dollars.

Mrs. Chadwick's career is shrouded in some mystery, but it is alleged that she was born in the early fifties in the province of Ontario, Canada; that her name was Elizabeth Bigley and that her father was a poor farmer with eight children. She was heard from in Cleveland as the bride of a Dr. W. S. Springsteen, who married her, thinking her to be an Irish heiress and capitalist. On discovering the falsity of these pretensions he deserted her. She afterward married C. L. Hoover, who on dying left her a wealthy widow with a son. Leaving Cleveland about 1868, she is said to have lived in Toledo under the name of Mme. Devere and to have practiced as a clairvoyant. Mme. Devere was tried for forgery and sentenced to a long term in the penitentiary, but was paroled after serving only part of the term. When the heroine of high finance was recently taken to the jail in Cleveland she was identified by the authorities there as the Devere woman. Mrs. Chadwick reappeared in Cleveland as a masseuse and met Dr. Leroy S. Chadwick, a widower of wealth and social standing, whom she married, and through use of his standing in the community and the claim of a relationship to Andrew Carnegie she obtained such credit with financiers of Cleveland and elsewhere that she was able to borrow hundreds of thousands of dollars.

MARTIN A. KNAPP.

Democratic and Republican presidents. He was born in Spafford, N. Y., in 1843, graduated from Wesleyan university with high honors in the class of 1868 and after teaching school for a time entered the legal profession and established himself in Syracuse, N. Y.

He served as city attorney and thus acquired familiarity with municipal law and afterward in private practice gave especial attention to laws pertaining to corporations. His appointment to the interstate commerce commission was recognized as a fitting one, and he has been chairman for six years. He believes in extending the power of the government over railroads and said not long since:

"If we could unearth the secret of these modern trusts, whose quick got wealth dwarfs the riches of Solomon and whose impudent exactions put tyranny to shame, we should find the explanation of their menacing growth in the systematic and heartless methods by which they have evaded the common burdens of transportation. Deprived of special and exclusive rates, an advantage far greater and more odious than exemption from taxation, these trusts would be shorn of their advantages and divested of their principal danger."

MAKING GREAT STRIDES.

Splendid Material Progress of American Womanhood.

In 1848, when the first woman's rights convention was held, men exclaimed: "What! Woman on the platform! Woman in the pulpit, in the college, in the courtroom, in the voting booth, in the legislature? Monstrous! It is against the ordinances of Almighty God! It will break up the order established at the creation and respected for 6,000 years! It will prove a lasting injury to all, mankind! It will give the lie to Scripture! It shall not be! Even the order of God is at stake!"

In that day the few who stood for the right of woman to a larger life were made the butt of ridicule. Yet in the light of history how ridiculous are their opponents!

How is it now? There are over 480,000 professional women in the United States. There are 1,000 lawyers, 2,000 journalists, 3,000 clergymen, 6,000 literary and scientific persons, 7,000 physicians, 8,000 government officials, 94,000 merchants and 328,000 teachers and college professors. And women are gaining on men in almost all the occupations save, strange to say, those of domestic servants, launderers, milliners and saloon keepers.

And what of woman's political status today? Full suffrage in four states of the Union, school suffrage in twenty states and some measure of political right in twenty-four states, with full suffrage in Federated Australia, and some form of suffrage in every civilized country of the world.

All this has been done in the face of the most solemn warnings—in the face of all the prophets of calamity. The heavens have not fallen. What harm has come? None, save the harm that has been done to the reputation of those who stood in the way.

I had rather be ahead of my time and suffer ridicule for a season than shake my fist and make grimaces in the face of advancing truth and thereby become the laughingstock of posterity. HERBERT S. BIGELOW.

THE threat of the President for an extra session of Congress in June has been taken seriously by only a few members.

THERE is a good deal of faith left in the country yet and people generally will be slow to believe that a United States Senator can be bought for $2,000.

THE Czar refuses to establish a Russian Congress. With the Japanese and the Baltic fleet at large and a revolution at home the Czar probably thinks he has trouble enough.

Stories Told by Footlight Favorites

WHEN Lillian Russell was dining with some of her profession al friends the other evening she told a story about an eccentric friend of hers, says the New York Times. This old lady had an aversion to paying calls. She went about once a year, but never got out of her carriage. She would send her coachman up the steps and make him stick a card under the door. One day as she was starting out on one of these annual visiting tours she said to her new coachman:

LILLIAN RUSSELL.

"John, I forgot my cards. You'll find them on my table upstairs. Run up there and get 'em."

John got the cards and they went the rounds. After some fifty calls had been made in rapid succession, the man shoving a card under every door, his mistress decided she had done a good day's work.

"Now, John," she said, "we'll pay two more calls and then go home."

"All right, ma'am," he answered, "that suits exactly. I've got just two cards left—the ace of spades and the jack of diamonds."

Elliston, the eccentric manager of Drury Lane theater, engaged an actor of whom he had heard good reports to play in the revival of "Venice Preserved." But unfortunately he did not come up to the mark, and when he reached the line, "Alas, where is my honor now?" Elliston exclaimed:

"I wish to heaven your honor were back in Newcastle, where you came from!"

James O'Neil of "Monte-Christo" fame tells a story about Frank Mayo, the Davy Crockett of days gone by. Mayo had borrowed $100 in the morning and had promised to repay it before he went to bed.

"Mayo and I were having a late supper when suddenly Mayo slapped his hand in his pocket. 'By Jove!' he exclaimed, jumping up. 'I've got to pay a man $100 tonight before I go to bed. Come on.'

"'Where does he live?' I questioned.

"'Well, that's the trouble. I don't know. He lives on Thirty-eighth street, between Seventh avenue and Broadway.'

JAMES O'NEIL.

"'But how are you going'—

"'Never mind,' said Mayo. 'Come on.' And we went out.

"In time we reached Thirty-eighth street and Broadway, and then Mayo stood in the middle of the street and in a voice that filled the midnight called: 'Henry Ford! Henry Ford!'

"Windows began to go up in all the houses, and heads were stuck out to view the two lone men standing in the street, one calling Henry Ford to 'come down and get your money!'

"A policeman who came by walked up to Mayo and recognized him. Mayo explained that he had $100 that must be paid before he went to bed and continued to call. We walked nearly the entire block when a window on the top floor of a house was thrown open, and to the next 'Henry Ford, come down and get your money,' which was by this time being laughingly echoed by the entire neighborhood, a man called:

"'What the deuce do you want?'

"'Thank heaven,' called back Mayo, 'it's you, Ford! Here's your $100. Come down and get it.'

"'Yes,' echoed the walls about, 'Henry Ford, for goodness' sake, do come down and get your money!'"

Richard Golden, the star of Henry W. Savage's successful production of "Common Sense Bracket," has an aunt in Waltham, Mass., who seldom attends the theater. Recently, however, Golden prevailed upon her to come to New York and see his show, and she finally consented.

RICHARD GOLDEN.

To Golden's mind the performance seemed to go smoothly, and, meeting his aunt after the final act, he inquired as to how she liked it.

"Parts of it were good, Dick, parts of it were just as natural as could be," replied the aunt, "but, Richard, if I were you I would hire a good teacher to make that band play in time in the second act."

Golden walked silently away, as he could not muster up courage enough to tell her that the chief source of fun in the second act is the "Rube band," playing each selection in ear splitting false notes.

The late Dan Leno was noted for his generosity, which at times he carried to excess. In the middle of one of his successful tours in the provinces he took a run into London and visited his favorite club. He was so delighted with the good dinner provided and the excellent service rendered by the waiter that he determined to reward the servant handsomely. Calling the waiter to him, he asked him how long he had been working at the club and [illegible] ganization since its foundation. "And what was the biggest tip you ever received?" asked the comedian. "Two sovereigns, sir," replied the waiter. "Well, my boy," said Leno, "I'm going to make that fellow look silly. Here's a fiver for you. Now tell me who was it that gave you £2?" "Well," said the waiter, after he had carefully pocketed the five pound note, and with a natural hesitation, "it was yourself, sir."

May Irwin, who has been on the stage since childhood and who is now playing "Mrs. Black Is Back," ascribes her success to "hard work and horse sense."

"Go abroad to star?" she said recently. "Not much! I would probably come back here and sing you some of those wonderful 'coon' songs they have there about 'Alligators on the Shores of Old Lake Erie' and 'Picking Cotton in Old Massachusetts.' I remember hearing one over there, 'My Dusky, Dark Eyed Belle From Maine.'

"And how I would look trying to sing 'coon' songs with a cockney accent! It would give me stage fright of the worst kind. I have it often enough on this side. People cannot realize how full of real downright hard work this life is. They say I skip down to the footlights and sing as naturally as if I liked it. They think it's fun for me, and fun for which I receive good money. Fun? Why, I carry the hod from the time the curtain goes up until it rolls down."

MAY IRWIN.

Miss Irwin tells many anecdotes about Augustin Daly's eccentricities. "The many stories of Willie Collier, while he was call boy at the theater, imitating Mr. Daly behind the scenes are true. The guv'nor, as we called Mr. Daly, got himself into all sorts of queer postures when he was at work. He would twist one leg up behind the other and get all in a snarl. Willie would get behind him and imitate him, exaggerating it awfully, of course, but following him right along in every movement.

"It was excruciatingly funny, and I always laughed hard. The guv'nor would hear the titter behind him and, without turning his head, say, 'Willie, tell them to keep quiet,' and Willie would come right up to me and say: 'Sh!' Why, I came near losing my engagement there that way.'"

J. H. Stoddart, the veteran actor who is starring in "The Bonnie Brier Bush" at the age of seventy-seven, was recently complimented upon his vigor, and he answered that he believed he could hold his own pretty well with the boys, saying that, like Adam in "As You Like It," he, too, could explain:

For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood.

When the subject of drinking is referred to the old actor recalls an experience which came near being his undoing. It was during the run of "A Celebrated Case" in 1878, in which Mr. Stoddart played the role of the sergeant.

J. H. STODDART.

"In the prologue I had a scene with Mrs. Booth, who played the wife of Jean Renaud, the hero, in the course of which he was supposed to give me, as the sergeant, a cup of wine, which I had to swallow. It so happened that the property man had been using kerosene on the stage during the day and had left the bottle containing that liquid upon the dresser where Mrs. Booth was in the habit of finding the drink for the sergeant. During the business she poured a full cup from this bottle, handed it to me, and I swallowed the contents at a gulp. 'Oh, Lord!' I said as I received the potion. 'What have I done?' asked Mrs. Booth under her breath. I could only gasp out 'Kerosene!' and make a hasty exit. For almost a week every one who came within range of my breath sniffed and inquired if I detected the odor of coal oil."

The night Miss Grace George, who is at present in the all star "Two Orphans" company, made her hit in "Under Southern Skies" her husband, William A. Brady, the theatrical manager, was so pleased that he ran on the stage and planted a kiss on his wife's cheek just as the curtain unexpectedly arose in response to an encore. Brady dashed off the stage, the skirts of his raincoat waving behind him as he ran. But the audience, which had caught him in the act, applauded madly, and the uproar did not cease until the blushing Brady was dragged before the curtain.

MISS GRACE GEORGE.

One day in New York Miss George had forty-six requests for her autograph and was naturally much pleased. The next day many more came.

"I've had more than a hundred requests for signatures since Monday," she said exultantly to Mr. Brady. "Isn't that a sign of success? Doesn't that look as though my autograph were worth something?"

"Worth something!" replied Mr. Brady dryly. "Well, I should say it was worth something! It's worth $4 for each specimen. The treasurer at the Madison Square had cashed nearly twenty dollars for cards bearing your name [illegible]

AN EXPERT IN HIS FIELD.

James R. Garfield, Commissioner of Corporations, and His Career.

James Rudolph Garfield, whose report as commissioner of corporations in the department of commerce and labor has received much attention, was not chosen for his important post simply because he is a son of the "martyr president," James A. Garfield. He was selected because he had shown special fitness for it. Shortly after Mr. Roosevelt became president he had to fill a vacancy in the national civil service commission and called in several members of the commission to take dinner and discuss the matter. During the meal Mrs. Roosevelt remarked:

"I know just the man for civil service commissioner."

"Who?" said the president. Mrs. Roosevelt named young Garfield.

"Just the person," said her husband after a moment's thought. "He is the right man for the right place. I will appoint him."

Mr. Garfield while a member of the Ohio senate had been somewhat of a thorn in the side of the politicians, having introduced and pressed to passage measures which were not welcome to them. Mr. Roosevelt knew that his appointment would not especially please either Senator Hanna or Senator Foraker. So he broke it to Uncle Mark in this way: "Senator, I have decided to appoint James R. Garfield a civil service commissioner."

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD.

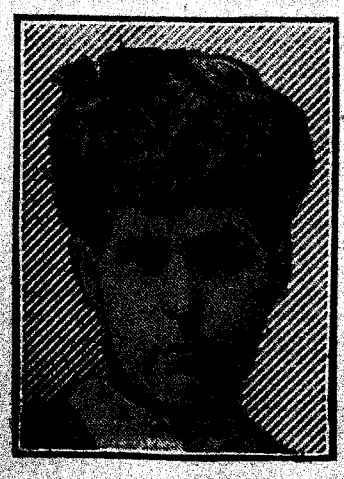
"You say you have decided to appoint him?" questioned Mr. Hanna. The president nodded. "Well, then, I guess it's too late for me to object," replied Mr. Hanna, with a smile.

Mr. Garfield's duties as civil service commissioner brought him in touch with Mr. Knox, then attorney general, who recognized his ability in problems pertaining to corporations. Mr. Knox told the president he wanted him as one of his assistants in antitrust legislation. Mr. Roosevelt replied that if Garfield were such a good man as that he would make him commissioner of corporations.



Commissioner Garfield is thirty-nine years of age. His hair is tinged with gray, and he has a frank smile and a sturdy frame. In physique and temperament he is said to resemble his father strongly.

MRS. MAYBRICK'S AMBITION.

To Clear Her Name and Recover Her Two Children.

Mrs. Florence Elizabeth Maybrick entitles the story of her life which she has recently completed "My Fifteen Lost Years." In it she gives the history of her prosecution on the charge of poisoning her husband, her long imprisonment, her sufferings and her release and presents fully her own side of the famous case.

Mrs. Maybrick says that she was averse to writing a book about her experiences, but was led to do so for several reasons. One of these was the desire to tell from her own point of view how British justice is administered and point out the crying need for a British court of appeals in criminal cases.

Another reason for writing the book was her desire to vindicate her character from all reproach not only in the eyes of the world, but in the eyes of her two children, James and Gladys, whom she has never once seen and with whom she has not been allowed to communicate since the time when she was charged with causing her husband's death. They have been brought up by her brother-in-law, Michael Maybrick, in the belief that she killed their father and are living, she knows not where, under assumed names. Her one great desire now is to recover the children to whom she has long been as dead.

A BRIGHT OUTLOOK.

Woman Suffrage Workers Encouraged by the Prospect of Success.

The new year opens with bright prospects for the cause of equal rights. The progress that it has made in the minds of thoughtful women the world over was conspicuously shown last summer at the International Council of Women in Berlin. There representatives of the women's councils of twenty nations by a unanimous vote indorsed the principle of equal suffrage and of one moral standard for men and women.

Public opinion in favor of equal rights is growing in every state of the Union. In every direction the old barriers that for ages have hedged women in are crumbling away. And each time that a woman takes a fresh prize or is admitted to a new occupation, each time the bars are taken down in the church, in education, in industry or in the professions, the announcement is welcomed by the press as a triumph of the modern spirit over mediaevalism. There are still some mediaeval minded editors who indulge in sneers and lamentations over each advance, but they are the exceptions and serve as a text for jokes to the more progressive majority.

Our cause is helped even by the sad and tragic features of the year, which are making women think and wish earnestly for more power in order to put a stop to such iniquities and cruelties. They are also leading thoughtful men to realize more and more the need of having the motherly and humane element adequately represented in the government of the world.

All suffragists are rejoicing over the signal victory achieved in regard to the statehood bill. In consequence of the women's widespread protest the clause has been stricken out that mentioned sex as a political disability to be properly ranked with illiteracy, imbecility, lunacy and crime. Verily "the world do move." And next year it will have moved on still farther.

ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

POSITION OF OUR WOMEN.

They Are Ranked by Men Below the Meanest of the Other Sex.

All women, no matter how well born, how well educated, how intelligent, how rich, how serviceable to the state, are the political inferiors of all men, no matter how base born, how poverty stricken, how ignorant, how vicious, how brutal. The pauper in the almshouse may vote; the lady who devotes herself to getting that almshouse made habitable may not. The tramp who begs cold victuals in the kitchen may vote; the heiress who feeds him and endows a university may not. Communities are agitated and legislatures convulsed to devise means to secure the right of suffrage to the illiterate voter. And the writers, journalists, physicians, teachers, the wives and daughters and companions of the best educated men in the state, are left in silence, blotted out, swamped, obliterated behind this cloud of often besotted ignorance.

Today the immigrants pouring in through the open gates of our seaport towns, the Indian when settled in severalty, the negro hardly emancipated from the degradation of 200 years of slavery, may all share in the sovereignty of the state. The white woman, the American woman, the woman in whose veins runs the blood of those heroic colonists who founded our country, of those women who helped to sustain the courage of their husbands in the Revolution; the woman who may have given the flower of her youth and health in the service of our civil war, this woman is excluded. Today women constitute the only class of sane people excluded from the franchise, the only class deprived of political representation except the tribal Indians and the Chinese.

DR. MARY PUTNAM JACOBI.

WHY THE BALLOT IS NEEDED

It Will Give Woman a Direct Influence in Human Affairs.

I believe in suffrage for women because a straight line is the shortest distance between two points. Indirection of any kind is either foolish or pernicious, and the indirect influence of one sex on the other has a sinister significance. I should call it rather undue influence and beg to remind that the man also has a right to the free and unclouded exercise of his own judgment.

If woman is entitled to any power or influence at all in the affairs of the human family of which she is a member she is entitled to the straightest, directest, most open, honest and efficient influence and power. This, human experience has decided, is the ballot, which is simply an unequivocal expression of opinion on the vital questions of the hour, backed by the covenant of civilization that the majority shall prevail, while at the same time the minority shall be protected in their inherent rights.

Women deserve the ballot because they are an honest, law abiding, patriotic class, with a smaller percentage of crime, of illiteracy and of the foreign element than their present rulers.

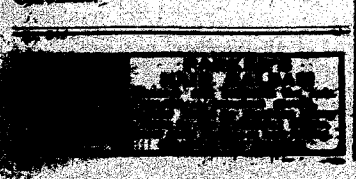
ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren Street, New York

Early American Theatricals.



The earliest attempt to introduce theatrical performances in this country was made about 1686 in New England, but Increase Mather wrote and spoke so forcibly in opposition to the project that it was speedily abandoned. The first theatrical performance in New York city of which there is any clear record was given March 5, 1750. The theater was on Nassau street, between John street and Maiden lane, and the play was "Richard III.," Thomas Kean, the junior manager of the company, enacting the part of Richard.

Cured His Mother of Rheumatism.

"My mother has been a sufferer for many years from rheumatism," says W. H. Howard of Husband, Pennsylvania. "At times she was unable to move at all, while at all times walking was painful. I presented her with a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and after a few applications she decided it was the most wonderful pain reliever she had ever tried, in fact she is never without it now and is at all times able to walk. An occasional application of Pain Balm keeps away the pain that she was formerly troubled with. Sold by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Are Brothers Polite?

Are brothers polite to their sisters? This is not a suggestion for a "silly season" correspondence, but a question of serious import. On the answer to it depended a sister's reputation when she was seen home to her boarding house after the theater by a young man. "Brother?" cried the indignant lady who had sat up to open the door to the late comer. "That was no brother. Why, I saw him raise his hat to you when he walked away!"—London Chronicle.

Don't Like Their Own Medicine.

Dentists are, as a rule, not living testimonials to their profession. "It is because we know how much a tooth can be hurt that we dislike to get into a chair ourselves," one of the craft explained the other day. "I had to fill a tooth for a fellow dentist last week and found it simply impossible to do a good job. He twisted and turned, grabbed my hand when he saw it coming his way and absolutely refused to let me do enough cutting to hold the filling solidly. Finally I patched the tooth up somehow, and he wouldn't let me polish off the edges. Give me the most hysterical woman before a dentist every time."—New York Tribune.

Monocles In the English Army.

About a century ago a British army order was issued forbidding officers to wear eyeglasses or spectacles. But a shortsighted officer belonging to a crack cavalry regiment had no mind to resign his commission or stumble blindly, and he invented the single eyeglass. When called to account by the authorities he claimed that the monocle, being of the singular number, did not contravene the order against spectacles and glasses in the plural. Red tape accepted this literal rendering of the law, and, becoming popular in the British army, the monocle was adopted by civilian beaus.

Take Cancer In Time.

An English specialist declares that "too late" has yet to be said in one-half or three-fourths of the cancer cases when seen by the operating surgeon. A general acceptance of the view that cancer has usually a precancerous stage and that this stage is the one in which an operation ought to be performed would be the means of saving many lives.

One Woman and Her Work.

Miss Estelle Reel for her work in superintending the Indian schools of the United States receives $3,000 a year and her traveling expenses. This is the largest salary paid to any woman by the government. The territory covered by Miss Reel is large, and most of her time is spent in going from school to school, which are often hundreds of miles apart. Many of her journeys are made on horseback. Her work has been progressive, and the Indian schools are said to have made a great advance under her management.

"Dear Sirs:

I have never taken any medicine that did me so much good as Dr. Kennedy's latest medicine, Cal-cura Solvent. I can work hard all day and can do more work than I could even thirty years ago. I am 68 years of age and never felt better in my life." All druggists, $1.00.

His Faith Unshaken.

One day the chodja prayed aloud that God would send him a thousand piasters. "A full thousand! I could not take less!" said he in concluding his prayer. A rich man who had heard the chodja praying thought he would try his consistency and next day placed a bag containing 999 piasters in his way. The chodja found the bag and counted the money, but as he was turning to carry it home the tempter stepped from behind a wall and cried: "Yesterday in your prayer you said you could not take less than a thousand piasters, and I wished to show you your inconsistency. Leave that money. It is mine!" "Oh, no," said the chodja. "This money God sent me in answer to my prayer, and I shall take it home, trusting that he who sent me 999 piasters will some time surely send me the one outstanding piaster. There is no inconsistency, but plenty of faith in me!" And he walked away well satisfied, carrying the bag.—Good Words.

Disquieting Suspicion.

"Do you enjoy your wife's teas and receptions?"

"No," answered Mr. Cumrox, "to be candid, I do not. I can't help harboring a suspicion that if I didn't happen to be her husband Mrs. Cumrox wouldn't consider me of sufficient social consequence to be invited."—Washington Star.

Contracted Chronic Diarrhoea While In the Philippines.

"While with the U. S. Army in the Philippines, I contracted chronic diarrhoea. I suffered severely from this terrible disease for over three years and tried the prescriptions of numerous physicians, but found nothing that did me any good until I tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, two small bottles of which entirely cured me and I have since had no return of the disease."—Herman Stein, 212 N. "Mad as a Hatter."

What is the derivation of the phrase "Mad as a hatter?" One explanation is that it was originally French, "As mad as an oyster" (huitre), that bivalve being supposed to be extremely unintellectual. Another theory is that the phrase had reference to Collins, the English poet, author of the "Ode to the Passions." He was a hatter at Chichester, and it has been said that the lunatics with whom he was confined at one time called him "the hatter" and that the phrase originated thus.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy the Best Made.

"In my opinion Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best made for colds," says Mrs. Cora Walker, of Porterville, California. There is no doubt about its being the best. No other will cure a cold so quickly. No other is so sure a preventive of pneumonia. No other is so pleasant and safe to take. These are good reasons why it should be preferred to any other. The fact is that few people are satisfied with any other after having once used this remedy. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Wild Licorice.

A bundle of licorice root—slim, rough sticks of tobacco brown wood—lay on the counter, and the sailor took one up and began to chew its end.

"I have seen the place where this stuff grows wild," he said. "Do you know where that is?"

"Can't say I do," replied the druggist.

"It is along the banks," said the sailor, "of the Tigris and the Euphrates. The licorice is a wild plant in those parts. It stands three feet high, and its roots reach the water. For miles and miles the licorice patches spread, and the smell of them fills the air. It is a sweet, heavy smell.

"In those parts they cut the licorice plants regularly, and they use the poor, crooked, imperfect sticks for firewood. The good, clean, straight sticks they bundle up—just like this bundle here—and ship to England and America. Some of the sticks go to druggists, to be sold cheap or given away, but most of them, nearly all of them, go to the snuff and tobacco manufacturers. What for? Why, to be used in adulter—I mean in flavoring tobacco and snuff."—Baltimore Herald.

The Warning In a Sneeze.

"As a general thing sneezing is nature's warning to get warmer in some way or other, and quickly," is the gist of an article by Dr. W. R. Conant in Modern Medical Science.

"The question of temperature and ventilation," he says, "is one of the most difficult winter problems. So much depends upon circumstances and individual idiosyncrasy that it is hard to lay down any definite rules. An indoor temperature which is suitable for a vigorous person or one in active motion is dangerous for one who is delicate or sitting and doing head work exclusively.

"As a general rule, it may be said that a temperature that falls much below 70 degrees at four feet from the floor is dangerous for sedentary workers, and any one who continues sitting when he feels chilled does so at the risk of his life."

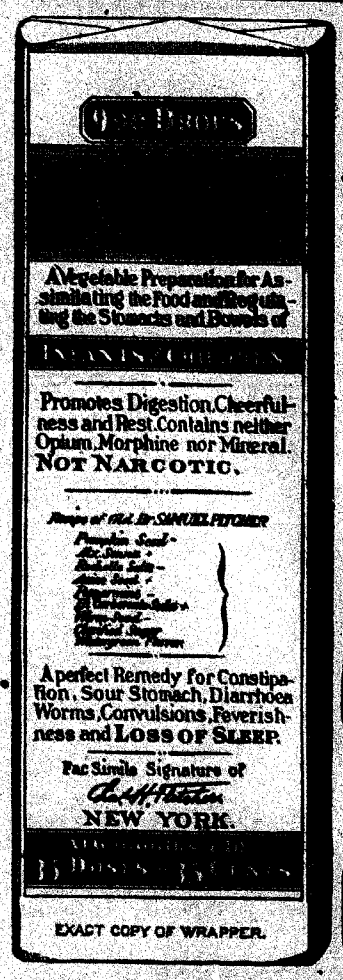
"SAVED MY LIFE"



—That's what a prominent druggist said of Scott's Emulsion a short time ago. As a rule we don't use or refer to testimonials in addressing the public, but the above remark and similar expressions are made so often in connection with Scott's Emulsion that they are worthy of occasional note. From infancy to old age Scott's Emulsion offers a reliable means of remedying improper and weak development, restoring lost flesh and vitality, and repairing waste. The action of Scott's Emulsion is no more of a secret than the composition of the Emulsion itself. What it does it does through nourishment—the kind of nourishment that cannot be obtained in ordinary food. No system is too weak or delicate to retain Scott's Emulsion and gather good from it.

His Deep, Deep Grief.

The Fulton (Kan.) Gazette reports that a minister of that town was moved by the grief of a husband whose wife was to be buried and sought to commiserate him in the following manner: "My brother, I know that this is a great grief that has overtaken you, and though you are compelled to mourn the loss of this one who was your companion and partner in life I would console you with the assurance that there is another who sympathizes with you and seeks to embrace you in the arms of unfailing love." To this the bereaved man replied by asking, as he gazed through tears into the minister's face, "What's her name?"

TERRIBLE 11-INCH GUNS

Japs' Marksmanship Hastened Capitulation.

GEN. STOESSEL INTERVIEWED.

Says It Is Untrue That He Dissented From Decision of Final Council of War—Officers Bitter Against Admiral Alexieff — Russians Invade Chinese Turkestan.

London, Jan. 18.—The correspondent at Nagasaki of the Express has had an interesting interview with General Stoessel, in the course of which the general said: "The capitulation occurring on New Year's day was merely a coincidence. The loss of 203 Meter hill and the subsequent capture of forts, combined with the deadly marksmanship with the terrible 11-inch shells, the depressing effect of the death of General Kondratenko, and the fearful increase of scurvy, really fixed the time of capitulation. It is quite untrue that I dissented from the unanimous decision of the final council of war. Our final urgent requests for relief were never answered.

"As regards parole, I distinctly discouraged any concerted action. Every officer decided for himself. Generally commanding officers stuck with their men and chose imprisonment. Most of the naval officers also chose captivity, many probably being influenced by the fear of impending court martial."

The correspondent adds that conversation with other Russian officers reveals great bitterness against and denunciations of Admiral Alexieff for his failure to properly fortify Port Arthur and "his cowardly flight" by the last train from the fortress.

They say the torpedo boat destroyers that escaped before the surrender carried all the regimental and naval colors to Chefoo. The junior officers denounce the incapacity and folly of the government in entering upon the war and declare that all the men who return to Russia from Port Arthur are revolutionists in spirit.

These opinions were openly expressed in the presence of General Stoessel, who remarked: "Let them talk; they have earned the right to think as they please by braving untold deaths for our country."

AWFUL SCENE IN TRENCHES.

Not a Single Russian Gun Escaped Damage by Bombardment.

Headquarters of the Japanese Army at Port Arthur, Jan. 9, via Tien Tsin. —When the Kwantung peninsula was bisected by the second Japanese army the entire Russian force in the military district of Talien, which included Port Arthur and Dalny, was 35,000. The Russian force at the battle of Nanshan was 41,000 and 2,000 of these were lost.

There have actually surrendered at Port Arthur between 9,000 and 10,000 soldiers and sailors, of whom many were unfit for duty. The sick and wounded number 16,000. Fifty per cent of the officers of the garrison were killed and only 28 went through the siege unscathed.

The fortress could have held out for some time longer but for the fire of the Japanese 11-inch howitzers which destroyed the food depots, the workshops and the ammunition stores and made the repair of the defensive works impossible.

The last news received by the garrison from General Kuropatkin was in October, when he said he had done his best to break through the Japanese lines to succor Port Arthur, but that he had failed.

A close examination of the main line of the defense of the west half of the eastern fortified ridges, from East Kekwan mountain to the destroyed Sungshu mountain fort, where the Japanese infantry assaults and bombardments were concentrated during the last days of the siege, demonstrated the effectiveness of the 11-inch howitzers. The Chinese wall on the slopes, the battery positions on the crest of the ridge and the captured guarding forts in the rear were literally torn to pieces.

It is difficult to understand how the infantry remained in the trenches behind the Chinese wall, in which great breaches were made. The traverses and bombproofs of the battery positions on Eboshiyama, east of East Ehlung mountain, Fort "H," and the new Banjusan and Mantai hill positions in the rear of the Panlung mountain forts, presented an awful scene. Not a single gun escaped damage by the Japanese bombardments.

In the crests of the ridge great holes were torn, and the gun emplacements were converted into heaps of debris. Dozens of guns were smashed and hurled from their carriages down the obverse side of the hill by the [illegible] fire. Between Wantai hill and Fort [illegible] a battery of 10-inch howitzers had been emplaced and every one of these guns was damaged while [illegible] of them were destroyed.

[illegible] gun was evidently just being [illegible]. A shell was in a carrier [illegible] to be put in a breech when a [illegible]-pound shell shivered the [illegible] and exploded. The en[illegible] killed by the ex[illegible] from firing [illegible] more the [illegible] at resistance on Christmas day against the Japanese infantry, which by a spirited rush captured Wantai hill. At 2 o'clock on the following morning the Russians exploded mines under the battery positions on the crest of the big East Kekwan fort. These positions, which were well constructed of concrete, are now a wreck, strewn with broken guns and debris of all kind. Not a vestige of the former works is left and the entire crest of the hill, one of the most powerful battery positions of the fortress, now is wrecked.

CASSINI THANKS HAY.

For Promptly Calling China's Attention to Russia's Charges.

Washington, Jan. 18.—Russia today, through Count Cassini, expressed her thanks to the American government for its prompt action in calling to China's attention the charges that her neutrality was being violated.

The Russian ambassador received a note from Secretary Hay acknowledging the communication of Count Lamsdorff and informing the ambassador that the American government had promptly called China's attention to the charges and expressed the fervent hope that China's neutrality as well as her administrative entity would be faithfully preserved.

The secretary further said that the Chinese minister had assured him that his government was equally desirous of remaining strictly neutral and was doing her utmost to prevent violations of her neutrality by either belligerent.

Secretary Hay had another conference with Sir Chentung Liang Cheng, the Chinese minister, the latter calling at the state department soon after Count Cassini's departure. The minister reported that he had received a telegram from his government asking for the charges in detail.

Count Cassini said that Russia's note to the powers was prompted by the fact that she had absolute proof that Chinese neutrality was being frequently violated and that unless China mended her ways and maintained with the assistance of the other neutrals as well as Russia an attitude of strict neutrality the imperial government would be forced to look first to Russia's interest.

"It is a reflection on a sane man's intelligence" the ambassador added, "to go into an explanation as to why Russia wishes China's neutrality maintained. It is self-evident and her energetic communication to the power is but another evidence of the faithful efforts she is making in this direction."

BREACHES OF NEUTRALITY.

Japanese Official Says It Is Russia's Aim to Embroil France With China.

Tokio, Jan. 18.—The note of the Russian government to the powers calling attention to the alleged violation by China of her declared neutrality which Russia charges has been at the instance of Japan, has created the impression in official quarters here that the Russians are trying to involve France, China and other powers in the war, so that Russia may take her defeat with greater grace.

A prominent Japanese official said to the correspondent:

"France recently denied that vessels of the Russian second Pacific squadron were stopping at Madagascar, but since then it has not uttered a word, and the situation is one calling for an explanation.

"I cannot believe that sane Frenchmen will be seriously influenced by the documents alleged to have been prepared by General Kodama, showing a plan of campaign for a Japanese invasion of French Indo-China, which are forgeries. If it should be Russia's scheme to first embroil France with China, it would be more easily understood than to provoke England alone, which act would not bring assurance of French support."

Russia Invades Turkestan.

London, Jan. 18. — The Morning Post's Shanghai corespondent says that the Chinese government complains that Russians have occupied Kashgar, the governor of which has appealed to the Chinese foreign board to open negotiations for the withdrawal of the Russians. Kashgar is the most western city in Eastern Turkestan and has a population of 50,000.

Threatens to Invade North China.

Paris, Jan. 18.—The Tien-Tsin correspondent of the Paris edition of the New York Herald says that Russia has threatened to invade North China and Chinese Turkestan if China continues to discriminate against Russian contraband in favor of Japan.

Deaths From Boiler Explosion.

Washington, Ga., Jan. 18. — Two persons were killed and two more very seriously injured by a boiler explosion at Graves mountain. The dead: William Martin, Jr., white; Willie Johnson, colored. Another negro is badly burned and probably will die. Two other negroes who were standing near the engine were blown over a rail fence, a distance of 20 feet, but not hurt. The engine and a small tool house were demolished.

Assault With Intent to Kill.

THE HOOKER CHARGES.

Grievance Committee's Report Received by Bar Association.

MADE SPECIAL ORDER FOR TODAY

Sub-Committee's Recommendation Is That a Further Investigation Be Held by the Legislature Before a Tribunal Having Compulsory Process—Election of Officers.

Albany, Jan. 18. — The New York State Bar association rounded out the first day of its 28th annual meeting with a reception at the Fort Orange club in honor of Hon. William Lindsay of New York city, formerly United States senator from Kentucky, and later chief justice of the highest court of that state. Mr. Lindsay was the speaker last night at the session of the association held in the assembly chamber, which was attended by a representative gathering of Albany people and of lawyers from all parts of the state.

This session of the association is made more than ordinarily important and interesting by reason of the report of the grievance committee upon the accusations against Warren B. Hooker of Fredonia, Chautauqua county, a justice of the supreme court in the Eighth judicial district, whose name was involved by postoffice department officials in the so-called "postoffice scandals," especially with reference to appointments and transactions connected with the postoffices at Fredonia and Dunkirk.

The grievance committee's report was received yesterday morning, and after some discussion as to the propriety of making it public before it had been acted upon by the association, was given to the press and made a special order for 2 p. m. today.

Printed copies were placed in the hands of the members, and occasioned the most intense interest.

The accusations against Justice Hooker were called to the attention of the Bar association of the state a year ago by the Bar association of Jamestown and were referred to the grievance committee, which appointed a sub-committee to investigate the matter. The findings and recommendations of the sub-committee are passed up to the association by the grievance committee without comment or recommendation.

The report is, on the whole, unfavorable to Justice Hooker, and the sub-committee's recommendation is that "A further investigation be had by the legislature before a tribunal having compulsory process."

S. C. Huntington of Pulaski, a member of the sub-committee, concurred in the report as far as it goes, but files additional "findings" in which he characterizes Justice Hooker's alleged action in outspoken terms, declares that he has shown himself unfit to be a justice of the supreme court, and recommends proceedings looking to his removal from office.

The association elected the following officers:

President Richard L. Hand of Elizabethtown; vice presidents, Cephas Brainerd of New York, James McKeen of Brooklyn, Wm. P. Rudd of Albany, Edgar T. Brackett of Saratoga, Edwin Nettingham of Syracuse, Frederick Collin of Elmira, John Van Voorhis of Rochester, John Cunneen of Buffalo; secretary, Frederick H. Wadhams of Albany, treasurer, Albert Hessberg of Albany.

Simon Fleischmann of Buffalo addressed the association on the subject: "Bar and Bench," relating especially to the influence of the bar upon judicial appointments and nominations.

At the afternoon session President Hand delivered the annual address of the president on "Professional Responsibility."

Charles E. Hughes of New York spoke on "Arrest and Imprisonment on Civil Process," and Adrian H. Joline of New York discussed "Martin Van Buren, the Lawyer."

Last night ex-Senator William Lindsay, formerly of Kentucky, now of New York city, delivered the annual address in the assembly chamber on "Constitutional Relations of the General Government to the Governments of the States composing the Federal Union."

Chief Justice Cullen of the court of appeals entertained Mr. Lindsay at dinner. The judges of the court of appeals and prominent members of the association were also Judge Cullen's guests. After the address in the assembly chamber Mr. Lindsay was entertained at the Fort Orange club.

Hundreds Buried by Earthquake.

London, Jan. 18.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg to a news agency reports that an earthquake at Shemakha (76 miles north northwest of Baku) buried hundreds of persons in the ruins of buildings in the lower part of the town, which was densely populated, despite the decision after the earthquake of three years ago that no more houses should be built there.

Bequests to Public Institutions.

Newburgh, N. Y., Jan. 18.—The will of David E. B. Carson, a wealthy resident of Newburgh, who died recently was probated today. Among the bequests are $5,000 to the Methodist church at Dalton, Berkshire county, Mass., his birthplace, and $1,000 to the Chapin Home for the Aged and Infirm in New York.

WITHHELD SALARY CHECK.

Commissioner Draper Removes Superintendent of Indian Schools.

Albany, Jan. 18. — Commissioner Draper of the state educational department issued an order yesterday removing C. C. Parker of Akron from the office of superintendent of Indian schools on the Tonawanda reservation in the counties of Erie, Genesee and Niagara.

In explanation Commissioner Draper gave out the following typewritten statement:

"Several checks were sent Superintendent Parker from the state department March 30, 1904, in payment of expenses for the maintenance of the Indian schools on this reservation. Among these checks was one for Fanny C. Poodry, an Indian woman, employed as teacher in such schools.

"Parker indorsed the name of Miss Poodry on such check, indorsed it himself and obtained payment thereon. He made no return therefor to Miss Poodry, but told her at various times that her check or money had not been received. In December Miss Poodry wrote Commissioner Draper to ascertain why her salary, due in March, had not been paid.

"When Mr. Parker learned that the matter had been referred to the state department he paid Miss Poodry the amount of the check. Parker claims to have been authorized by Miss Poodry to indorse her name on such check. Commissioner Draper ordered an investigation of the affair and directed Parker to appear before him at the Capitol to show cause why he should not be removed from office. Parker appeared at the hearing, but his explanations were unsatisfactory to the commissioner, who removed him from office."

HANDWRITING EXPERTS.

Their Evidence Somewhat Discredited by Cross-Examination.

Cambridge, Mass. Jan. 18. — The sharp cross-examination of Attorney General Parker relieved the monotony of an uninteresting day of expert handwriting testimony at the trial of Charles L. Tucker, charged with the murder of Mabel Page.

Colonel Edward B. Hay was recalled by the defense and he said that he believed that Mabel Page was the person who wrote the disputed Morton address. Mr. Parker, on cross-examination, having secured from the witness the information that a break between letters in the Morton address was one of the significant characteristics connecting Miss Page with the writing of the note and that such breaks were unusual, presented for the inspection of Colonel Hay two envelopes which had been received in the morning mail and which showed numerous breaks between letters to prove that such breaks were not unusual.

Albert H. Hinman, another handwriting expert, also expressed the opinion that Mabel Page wrote the Morton address. He admitted, however, that the conclusions he arrived at were merely his "opinion."

Unity of Sunday School Work.

Philadelphia, Jan 18. — Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, bishop of the diocese of Central Pennsylvania, came here from his home in South Bethlehem to attend the meeting of the general committee on Sunday school instruction of the Episcopal church, of which he is chairman. The committee is regarded as one of the most important of the Episcopal church and was appointed by the last general convention. Its appointment marks the first effort on the part of the Protestant Episcopal church to effect some degree of unity with other denominations on the question of instruction in the Sabbath school.

On a Dividend-Paying Basis.

Philadelphia, Jan 18.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Lehigh Valley Railroad company was held here and the old board of directors was re-elected. Contrary to expectations Norman B. Ream of New York did not resign from the board. The stockholders adopted a resolution requesting the directors to declare an extra dividend of at least 1 per cent. President Thomas made an address to the stockholders during which he declared that the company is now on a substantial dividend-paying basis.

Steamboat Inspection Service.

Washington, Jan. 18.—The hearings of the maritime interests of the country before Secretary Metcalfe have been concluded. CRAZED BY HIS LOSSES

Made Two Attempts to Jump From Brooklyn Bridge.

TRIED TO BEAT OUT HIS BRAINS.

Frank D. Austin Claimed to Have Lost $70,000 by Reason of Thomas W. Lawson's Attack on Wall Street Interests — Violent Struggle With Three Policemen.

New York, Jan. 18. — Claiming to have lost his fortune of $70,000 as a result of Thomas W Lawson's attack upon Wall street interests, a man who said he was Frank D. Austin, 40 years old, twice attempted to throw himself from the Brooklyn bridge. He was prevented from jumping by Captain Devanney of the Bridge police, who grappled with him and, after a long struggle, in which he was helped by two detectives, placed him under arrest.

Captain Devanney was warned that the man was to make an attempt upon his life by a pawnbroker whose place of business is near the New York end of the bridge. He told the captain that the man had just left his shop after pawning some jewelry with the remark: "I guess the only thing left for me is to jump off the bridge."

With the two detectives the captain found the man and followed closely behind as he rode out on a trolley car on the way across the bridge. The car had just passed the Manhattan tower when Austin sprang into the roadway that separated him from the bridge railing.

The officers sprang after him and he was subdued after a hard struggle. He was put on another car and sat so quietly that the officers believed he would make no more trouble. Suddenly, however, he jumped from the seat and was half way across the roadway before the officers overtook him.

Then followed a most violent struggle, in which the three policemen were hardly a match for him. Several women in the car were on the verge of panic when Austin finally was subdued and led back to the car.

"I want to end it all," he told his captors on the way to the police station. I have lost $70,000 in Wall street all on account of that frenzied financier, Thomas W. Lawson."

Later Austin tried to beat out his brains against an iron stanchion in a police court room. He was evidently demented and his statements were incoherent.

STUDENTS' LOSSES PAID.

Mr. Carnegie Comes to Relief of Sufferers From Bank Failure.

Oberlin, O., Jan. 18. — President King of Oberlin college announced at chapel that all moneys lost by students through the failure of the Citizens National bank, which closed its doors at the time of the alleged Chadwick forgeries, would be paid on presentation of the pass books.

President King announced further that Andrew Carnegie was the man who was doing this.

At the time of the failure the stories of privation and hardship which would ensue to students who had their money in the bank were brought to Mr. Carnegie's attention and he asked for a list of all worthy depositors. Yesterday a check was received from Mr. Carnegie, who President King stated, while innocently figuring in the bank failure, and in no wise responsible, did not wish to see deserving students and others suffer.

Besides the depositors Mr. Carnegie reimbursed the Y. M. C. A. to the extent of about $3,000, which was lost in the same failure.

Private Car Lines the Greatest Evil.

Washington, Jan. 18.—In the hearing on the Cooper-Quarles bill before the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce a report from the New York Board of Trade and Transportation was presented in opposition. The report was directed against private car lines as the greatest evil in the transportation problem and suggested a special commission from both houses of congress to investigate the whole subject during the recess and report to the next congress.

Two Killed by Dynamite.

Bedford, Ind., Jan. 18.—By an explosion of dynamite near here two men were killed and four others injured. The men were employes of the Central Union Telephone company. They were returning to town in a wagon into which they had thrown the dynamite, explosive caps and tools. The jarring of the wagon caused the explosion of the caps. The wagon was blown to pieces and one of the horses was injured.

Bail For Mrs. Chadwick.

Cleveland, Jan. 18.—At the request of J. P. Dawley, counsel for Mrs. Cassie L. Chadwick Judge Wing fixed bail of $20,000 on the five federal indictments against her. This Mr. Dawley said would be furnished, and he will at once ask the state courts to fix bail on the county indictments that Mrs. Chadwick may be released.

With the exception of two votes for Kerens and Bittenger, the Republicans had all their forces in line for Niedringhaus, the caucus nominee.

Representative Grace, who introduced the resolution that resulted in the appointment of a committee to investigate the campaign contributions of Niedringhaus, and who was accounted an adherent of Kerens, seconded the speech nominating Niedringhaus. He announced also that he spoke in behalf of Kerens and his adherents.

Senator Dietrich's Successor.

Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 18.—Without a party caucus or other formality save the pledges of a state and district convention, the Republicans in the Nebraska legislature voted for Elmer J. Burkett for United States senator to succeed Senator Dietrich.

Bulkeley to Succeed Hawley.

Hartford, Conn., Jan. 18.—Former Governor Morgan G. Bulkeley received the vote for United States senator to succeed Senator Joseph S. Hawley in each house of the general assembly.

The Cost of Impatience.

In the impatient mood we are apt to spend far more than is required in the doing of our work, and this excess is lost. We cannot estimate the value of the power thus misplaced. When the impatient mood becomes the habit of a lifetime, you can understand that failure and perhaps loss of health and energy are inevitable.—Emily S. Bouton in Magazine of Mysteries.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Annual Meeting and Election of Officers. Barge Canal Discussed and Resolution Adopted Endorsing Plans Submitted By Resident Engineers — Proposed Federal Building—Reports of President, Secretary and Treasurer.

The annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held last Wednesday evening in the City Hall. Preceding the business session, the members and invited guests partook of an excellent supper provided by the ladies of Zion Episcopal church. At the conclusion of the repast, President Redhead called the assemblage to order and after the reading of the minutes of the previous session by Secretary Bennett, and their adoption, Mr. Redhead explained the purpose of the meeting. He stated that the present occasion was simply an enjoyable social gathering preceding the annual meeting: it should not be confounded with the regular banquet, which would be held at a later date. He was pleased to greet so many of the representative citizens of Fulton who were identified with its financial and commercial prosperity. The Chamber of Commerce, he stated, was an excellent institution, as the many varied interests it represented were working together for the common good and the betterment of conditions in our home city.

In calling for the reports of committees, Mr. Redhead explained, in behalf of Mr. J. W. Rigley, who was unavoidably absent, and upon whom had devolved the investigation of the contention between Mr. David Baldwin and the Lackawanna Railroad over a crossing at Leitch street, that Mr. Baldwin had concluded to move his plant to Batavia, where a most advantageous offer had been accepted. He regretted Mr. Baldwin's decision, and felt that the Lackawanna road had dealt unjustly with him, possibly unintentionally. The Chamber of Commerce would have done all in its power for the amelioration of the conditions which confronted Mr. Baldwin. His decision to remove to another city was a matter of regret. Owing to the facts stated, the report of the committee was held in abeyance.

President Redhead's annual report was presented and was listened to with a great deal of interest. It explained in detail the needs of our city and especially dwelt upon the necessity for a building where small industries could be carried on, each employing a number of hands. There were no vacant buildings that could be utilized for manufacturing purposes in the city.

THE BARGE CANAL

The Barge Canal was an enterprise that should enlist the hearty co-operation of all citizens; it meant the increase of water power, the consequent enlargement of present industries and the establishment of new interests. He regretted that there should arise any local difference on the part of a few to the plans submitted to the State Advisory Board by the resident engineers; such a policy was extremely short-sighted and might result in delay or possible defeat of the measure. The local manufacturers had everything to gain and nothing to lose by giving the project their undivided attention and support. All narrow and selfish considerations should be lost sight of when the welfare and future prosperity of the city were at stake. Public interest demanded unanimity of action. (See President's annual report on page 2.)

The proposed new Federal building; the high tax rate and its effect upon industrial development, economy in the administration of our civic affairs, completed a most interesting and instructive document.

Mr. Redhead stated that there was no subject of more interest to the people than a Federal building. Congressman Knapp appeared to be willing to do all in his power to forward the project. There was some doubt about the probability of securing immediate relief, but thought that by the next session of Congress some definite action might be taken; was hopeful that within the next two or three years such a building might be secured. A recent letter received from Congressman Knapp was read by Mr. Redhead, who said that no complaint could be entered regarding the efforts our Congressman was putting forth to secure the necessary appropriation.

Postmaster Youmans stated in reply to Mr. Redhead's request regarding new developments in the Federal building project, that he had received an inquiry from the supervisory architect at Washington, and had answered all questions asked. The estimated returns for the post office in 1893 he stated, were about $10,000; 1903, $15,178.58; 1904, about $20,000; in ten years hence it is thought the returns will be from $22,000 to $30,000. Population of Fulton 1893, 4,500; in 1903, 8,541: estimated population ten years hence, from 15,000 to 20,000. Employes in post office in 1893, 3 or 4; in 1905, including carriers, 15. There would be about 125 square feet required for the new building. Mr. Youmans had obtained prices on desirable lots for the erection of the proposed Federal building.

Mr. Youmans called attention to the new additional evening mail, which closed at 5:40 o'clock for New York City and all points east and west of Syracuse. He had also recently forwarded to the postal authorities an application for two new R. F. D. routes in Volney and Granby. The application had been granted and the routes would be established about July 1.

Many letters had been written Congressman Knapp by influential men in this district, regarding the new Federal building, which formed a most interesting summary and were read by Secretary Bennett.

Mr. Redhead had recently talked with Justice Andrews, who, with Hon. Elihu Root, were called on to test the constitutionality of the Barge Canal act. Justice Andrews told him that it was the intention of those interested to push the matter with the utmost expedition.

Mr. George Chauncey stated in reply to a request from Mr. Redhead, that there was nothing new to report concerning the Barge Canal. He explained in detail what transpired at the recent conference with the Advisory Board at Albany. Believed that all should desire to have the work completed along the lines suggested by the resident engineers. Was afraid that the letting of contracts for this section would be delayed through the action of the upper dam water-power owners and that it would not be included in the $10,000,000 appropriation this year. Was anxious to have the Barge Canal completed to Oswego so that advantage could be taken of the shipments of pulp wood from Canada. Mr. Chauncey asked that Messrs. Hunter, Fowler and Bennett be made a committee to draft a resolution that would be expressive of the sentiment of the Chamber of Commerce in regard to the matter and which could be presented to the Advisory Board at the next conference.

Mr. Chauncey's request was complied with and the committee was appointed by Mr. Redhead.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED ENDORSING PLANS FOR CANAL SUBMITTED BY RESIDENT ENGINEERS.

The following resolution was presented and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, The Fulton Chamber of Commerce, representing the largest business interests of our city, having followed with close attention the plans for the construction of the 1,000-ton Barge Canal, desires to express its endorsement of the plans now prepared as being eminently fair to all water powers and request the Advisory Board to recommend the construction of the canal through Fulton according to the plans of the resident engineer.

The question of amendments to the city charter was touched upon. Mr. Redhead believed that the 1½ per cent. limit on budget should be increased to 2 per cent. The matter, however, should be carefully considered and the Chamber should voice its sentiments in a most emphatic manner. He deprecated the increase of assessments.

It was futile for Mr. Redhead to protest that he did not desire a re-election to the presidency of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. John Hunter stated that the position required some one who had Mr. Redhead's ability; he was convinced that Mr. Redhead should be retained, as he was pre-eminently qualified and better able than any other member to discharge the duties of the office. Mr. Redhead was re-elected by a large majority.

The result of the balloting was as follows:

President, E. R. Redhead.
Vice-President, Arthur W. Wiltsie.
Treasurer, W. J. Lovejoy.
Trustee for three years, G. S. Piper.

Owing to the pressure of other matters, Mr. Lovejoy has declined the proffered honor of treasurer and Mr. B. W. Bennett the position of secretary.

A meeting of the Board of Managers was held on Tuesday afternoon when Mr. W. A. Butts was selected as treasurer and Mr. N. L. Whitbeck secretary.

Arrangements are now being made for the printing of a Chamber of Commerce compendium containing a revised list of the membership. Events of the utmost importance to our city and its industries are about to transpire, hence the necessity of active co-operation on the part of all public-spirited citizens, who can accomplish more for the best interests of the city by working in and throught the Chamber of Commerce than by individual effort. As a representative body the Chamber will be heard on all matters of public interest, and as Mr. Redhead states, when it speaks it should be with emphasis, commanding the respectful attention of all.

CHAMBER COMMERCE

President E. R. Redhead's Annual Report.

To the Members of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce.

Gentlemen: Another year's work is completed and the reports of the officers will give you some idea of what has been accomplished since our last annual meeting.

The importance of a Board of Trade to every wide-awake city or village is now so apparent that scarcely a city or village of any considerable size can be found to-day without such an organization. Not only is the value of such a body shown in the securing of new or in the strengthening of established industries, but also in the consideration of many projects or questions which greatly affect the prosperity of the community.

We should all be gratified if we could bring one or more industries to our city every year. This is hardly possible with the means at our command. But as already several very valuable plants have been secured through the well directed efforts of our Chamber of Commerce, so it is altogether probable that as much, if not more, will be accomplished in this line in the same number of years if we carry out faithfully and energetically the purposes of our organization. The officers are constantly watching for new enterprises which may be induced to locate in our midst, and on such a basis that they will prove of permanent value to us. If we wished to give larger bonuses or take big blocks of stock in new companies we could report every year seemingly great prosperity in the way of industrial development. Such has not been the policy of our Chamber of Commerce up to this time and I think I am safe in saying that there is slight probability of a change in this regard in the years to come.

We must be content to work in smaller and more practical ways, but, following these in a wise and systematic manner, we shall surely produce results which will amply repay us for time and money expended.

If we had a modern industrial building in which could be located some smaller industries seeking homes, but which would in the aggregate employ a large number of hands, it would be a great advantage in increasing our manufacturing enterprises.

Moreover, in seeking ways of development, we must not forget that it means just as much to enlarge an already existing plant as to secure a new industry, employing the same number of hands. If there are enterprises which have grown from small beginnings but which have proven their merit and only need more capital and good business management to ensure safe returns, is it not the part of wisdom to help and encourage these struggling but promising industries and place them on a substantial and prosperous basis? We believe there are several of these in our city to-day, which offer strong inducements to careful investors, and thus some of our people with surplus cash could not only secure good investments, but also help to build up and enlarge industries which would add greatly to the general welfare of the city. Just at present these offer a more promising field for the industrial growth of our city than new and untried propositions.

The Barge Canal project as it affects our city has been carefully watched by our Chamber of Commerce. The benefits which would results from the building of this canal both in the expenditure of so large a sum in our city for work and materials and the permanent advantages which would accrue to the city in the practical doubling of the available water power are so great, that it is a matter of regret in the first place, that a strong anti-canal sentiment in the state is likely to delay the beginning of active work of construction of the new canal, and in the second place, that the opposition of water power owners on one dam here, to the raising of the other dam, should hinder the completion and acceptance of the engineers' plans for the canal through Fulton and possibly cause a modification of them to the serious injury of the city's highest welfare. These plans seem to be eminently fair to the mill owners and particularly to those who are making opposition. It is to be hoped that fairness and good judgment will prevail in this matter and that nothing will be done which will jeopardize or minimize the splendid benefits possible to the city by the building of the barge canal, according to the present plans.

The proposed new post office building in Fulton has been received with great favor by our own people and is evidently receiving very serious consideration in Washington. Our efficient Congressman in Washington, the Hon. Chas. L. Knapp, received most kindly the suggestion for the new building and upon investigating the urgent and growing need for such a public building here, introduced, upon the assembling of Congress in December, a bill appropriating $75,000 for the purpose. It is too early to say what may be the fate of this measure, which is now in the hands of the committee on public buildings. It is too much to expect that favorable action will be taken before the present congress adjourns on March 4th, but we have the strongest hop s that during the sessions of the next congress an appropriation will be made and in the course of two or three years a stately post office building will arise in our business section, that will furnish what we so much lack now, commodious and convenient quarters for the patrons of our local post office. This desirable object can only be secured by careful planning and wise action on the part of all interested in its consummation. The Chamber of Commerce should watch closely every move in this important project.

The necessity of strict economy in national, state and municipal expenditures is being emphasized on every hand. Our own city officials need to guard this point with scrupulous care. I wish to commend the stand taken by the Mayor on this subject, in which position he has, I believe, the cordial support of the other city officers and certainly of the great majority of our citizens. The tax rate is unusually high this year and is not only becoming a burden to many people, but is likely to be a menace to industrial development, for if taxes are too high new concerns will avoid us. We have reached the danger point and need to scrutinize very closely our expenditures. This does not mean that as a municipality we should pursue a mean and niggardly policy and fail to provide for objects which we have agreed to sustain, or which are clearly essential to the well being and happiness of our people. It will happen in municipal, as in individual cases, that occasionally expenses will run above the general average, sometimes for the best of reasons, or sometimes, for causes we cannot well control, but it is invariably true that even under such circumstances, we can practice economy and save money in certain directions, which might otherwise be wasted or used for purposes not necessary for comfort or progress.

These and many other subjects show the wide scope of the questions which are from time to time considered by the chamber of commerce and how intimately they are related to the welfare of the city. Every broad-minded, public-spirited citizen, should esteem it a duty, as well as a privilege, to hold membership in this representative body and to help, by his presence, and by his words and votes, to the taking of such action and the shaping of such policies as will promote the material, social, intellectual and moral welfare of our community.

E. R. REDHEAD, President.

Jan. 18th, 1905.

Secretary B. W. Bennett's Report.

To the Members of the Fulton Chamber of Commerce:

Gentlemen: I beg to submit the following report for the year 1904:

Following the custom inaugurated in 1903, only three regular meetings of the Chamber have been held this year, the July or midsummer being passed over because of warm weather and a general absence of members from the city. There has been a good attendance at all meetings and much interest has been manifested in the work of the organization. All committees have faithfully performed their duties, and the Board of Managers feel that they have been well [illegible] in their efforts.

[illegible] of the business of the Chamber has been conducted quietly and I trust with dignity; there has been no display and I believe the members may be congratulated upon the present standing of the organization. The membership is now 110.

In all business projects that have been presented, I have found the members ready to render advice and assistance, and the support thus given has been of material benefit to the Chamber and to the city it represents. In our Chamber the general interests of the city are jealously watched, and are discussed by the members in the regular meetings and by the Board of Managers at their sessions. Having the advantage of being non-sectarian and non-political, and occupying what might be called the holy ground of common sense, the action of such an organization as this wields a strong influence and can serve the best interests of the community at all times and without embarrassment.

During the year, the Chamber has become interested in the subject of a Federal Post Office building for the city. At the January meeting, Postmaster Youmans discussed the needs of the office, and this subject has been energetically pushed by the Chamber. At that meeting was also taken up the subject of the vexatious delays in our morning mail, and as a result of the correspondence conducted by us, the mail was routed via the D. L. & W. road instead of the N. Y. C., and the delays ceased.

At the April meeting divers topics of local interest were discussed, such as the opening of a street from First to Second in the block bounded by Rochester and Broadway, the extension of Leitch street across the D. L. & W. tracks to the Baldwin mill, the west side sewerage system, the proposed trolley line through the city, and the important topic of the Barge Canal, which has occupied considerable time and been the subject of much thoughtful discussion in the meetings.

The November meeting continued the discussion of the two street openings previously before the Chamber; heard Mr. G. G. Chauncey's comprehensive report on the Barge Canal plans, and listened to our President's letter to our Member of Congress, Hon. Charles L. Knapp, relative to Fulton's new post office building so earnestly desired. As a result of the Chamber's action, Mr. Knapp has introduced in Congress a measure looking toward the erection of a suitable Federal building in Fulton, and it is hoped that in the near future the measure may be passed and the appropriation made. We believe that Fulton needs this building and deserves this recognition.

Many propositions from manufacturers have been received and several firms have sought financial assistance as an inducement for locating plants in this city. We have endeavored to interest and secure some of the most desirable of these industries, but the financial under writing has been beyond the capacity of the Chamber to perform, and larger or richer communities have secured the prizes. The natural advantages of Fulton are so great, however, that manufacturers cannot overlook them when seeking locations for their plants, and the advent of the Barge Canal means a great deal to the future of this city. Recently some large concerns have sent representatives to inspect proposed sites in this city and these gentlemen have expressed much satisfaction over the situation here.

I regret to record a sad event of the past year, the death of Mr. Eugene Sullivan. Mr. Sullivan had been a member of the Chamber for two years, and had a wide circle of friends. His death occurred in February last.

In the performance of its duties as outlined in its constitution, the Chamber of Commerce of Fulton has striven to "foster our present industries, to induce new enterprises to locate with us and to promote the general welfare of the city."

I hope the seed now sown will soon bear fruit.

Respectfully,
B. W. BENNETT.

Fulton, N. Y., Jan. 18, 1905.

Treasurer W. J. Lovejoy's Report.

The following report was presented by Treasurer W. J. Lovejoy and adopted:

Balance on hand at commencement of year		$532.84
Received from dues for year		524.15
Interest on account in Fulton Savings Bank		21.70
Balance on hand Jan. 18, 1905	$638.99	—
Expenditures	439.70	—
	$1,078.69	$1,078.69

In compliance with Mr. Lovejoy's request, a committee consisting of Messrs. C. C. Benedict, L. W. Emerlok and W. A. Butts, was appointed by Mr. Redhead to examine the report. The chairman explained that this course was a mere formality, as no one questioned Mr. Lovejoy's integrity. The report was found correct.

BIBLE CLASS AND CLUB.

W. E. Church, Formerly of Fulton, Elected President of Young Men's Club Conducted in Conjunction with John D. Rockfeller's Bible Class.

The Young Men's Bible Class of the Fifth Avenue Baptist church, New York, with John D. Rockfeller, Jr., as leader, has a world-wide reputation. Eight per cent. of its membership is made up of young men who have come from cities and villages other than New York. In connection with the class is a club located at No. 11 West Forty-fifth street. It is not generally known, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that the most active member of the class and club and who has been elected president, is Mr. W. E. Church, a native of Fulton and who, as a boy, "benefited by teachings in the Academy under such admirable guides as Miss Bissionette, Miss Howard and Miss Lasher, at the time when Prof. Coates and Uncle John Poole were familiar figures about town." Mr. Church writes that he often takes pleasure in referring to Fulton as his home when other members endeavor to report well of their town. At a recent tea given in the club rooms, the New York Journal states: R. F. Williams, chairman of the entertainment committee, presented the members to W. E. Church, president of the club, who in turn presented them to Mrs. Rockfeller. She took each by the hand and had something to say to each. Then she introduced them to her daughter. When all were seated, Mr. John Young, the tenor, sang several selections, after which refreshments were served. Mrs. Rockfeller headed the line of waiters, with a great tray of dishes containing chicken salad. She was followed by Mrs. Prentiss, who had a tray, and by Mr. Rockfeller, with a pitcher of chocolate.

The club gives frequent entertainments during the year, when the members enjoy the privilege of listening to addresses from the leading literary and distinguished men of the age.

About That Trip.

Road Improvement For All Counties

Under the present statute the State of New York, for the improvement of the main highways, pays 50 per cent. of the cost of the improvement, the county 35 per cent. of the cost of the improvement and the town 15 per cent. of the cost of the improvement in the town. The annual revenues of the State to meet the demand for road improvement are so small that nine counties out of the entire fifty-seven have so far gotten nearly all the road improvement. This is proper under the statute, but it is not a fair and equitable distribution of the road improvement fund. The Supervisors' Highway Convention have, therefore, recommended an issue of $50,000,000 of bonds to pay for the improvement of one mile in ten of all the highways in all the counties throughout the entire State. It is a fact that a highway system laid out in each county on the main highways improving one mile in ten of the total highway mileage of each county will leave no farm in each county further away than five miles from an improved road, and over 60 per cent. of the farms will be directly on or within three miles of an improved road. Under the bond issue it is possible for every county, no matter whether they have taken hold of the road question up to this date or not, to obtain an equal recognition for road improvement with every other county in the State. Of the $50,000,000 bond issue it will be possible to expend $5,000,000 a year during a period of ten years, thus completing one-tenth of the entire highway-system in each county in the State during ten years, so that there will be an equitable and fair distribution of highways in all of the State whether the counties are large or small, or whether they have a high or a low assessed valuation.

THIS is the day of the natural waisted woman. The W. B. Erect Form has changed the American figure. It has supplanted discomfort with ease—it has banished the impossible and exaggerated figure produced by the old corset idea. It removes the strain of lacing from the sensitive parts of the body and throws all pressure upon the hips and the strong back muscles, supporting the stomach within the corset and not forcing it below the garment. The Erect Form is made in more models than ever before. There are forty distinct styles of this popular make, each meant for a distinct type of woman. Dealers in all sized towns and cities the land over, sell the Erect Form. Prices range upward from $1.

REVIEW OF REVIEWS

The more Magazines there are, the more Indispensable is The Review of Reviews

"Indispensable," "The one magazine I feel I must take," "The world under a field-glass," "An education in public affairs and current literature,"—these are some of the phrases one hears from noted people who read the Review of Reviews. The more magazines there are, the more necessary is the Review of Reviews, because it brings together the best that is in all the most important monthlies of the world. Such is the flood of periodical literature that nowadays people say that the only way to keep up with it is to read the Review of Reviews. Entirely over and above this reviewing section, it has more original matter and illustrations than most magazines, and the most timely and important articles printed in any monthly.

Probably the most useful section of all is Dr. Albert Shaw's illustrated "Progress of the World," where public events and issues are authoritatively and lucidly explained in every issue. "Every subscriber writes," "This department alone is worth more than the price of the magazine." The unique cartoon department, depicting current history in caricature, is another feature. The Review of Reviews covers five continents, and yet is American, fair and fearless.

Men in public life, the members of Congress, professional men, and the great majority of solid, well-informed men and women of affairs, find the Review of Reviews a necessity.

Before and After.

Somebody—Pardon me for mentioning it, but isn't your wife a little cross at times? Mr. Henpecked Husband—She does seem so to me. Before we married she used to sit on my lap and kiss me all over me.—Somerville Journal.

By Wireless From the Footlights

"WHEN I left the management with which I had been associated for several years," said Miss Amelia Bingham recently, "and announced that I was determined to launch out for myself, I had plays read to me until I was almost deaf. Mr. Clyde Fitch read all that he had to offer, and none suited me. I asked him one morning if he were through. He answered: 'Yes, practically through. I have another piece; but, to be frank with you, it has been refused by every reputable manager in New York, and it has become well thumb marked.'

MISS AMELIA BINGHAM.

"I told him that was the piece I would like to read. He made an appointment for the next morning, and I went to his house to hear it. After he had read the first act I said to myself, 'Mourning, that is something new, and it will catch the public; good situations there.'

"After the reading of the second act I liked it better still, and at the close, or, really, before that, I said, 'Mr. Fitch, where shall I send you a check?' He was surprised, but I meant what I said, as he soon realized, for I asked him then and there who should paint the scenery, and we arranged before we went to lunch the first details of the undertaking. The play that had been 'refused by every reputable manager in New York' was my greatest success, 'The Climbers.'"

During a performance of "Henry VIII." at the Lyceum, London, the actor who played Cromwell in extolling the merits of Wolsey delivered as usual the passage:

Ever witness for him
Those twins of learning that he raised in you.
Ipswich and Oxford—

when a cheery individual in the boxes cried out, "Hang me if I knew that Cardinal Wolsey was married before!"

Daniel Frohman, the theatrical manager, has twice been instrumental in changing the name of Margaret Illington, who is now appearing in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots." Mr. Frohman first heard of the young woman when as Miss Maud Leit of Bloomington, Ill., she won the Joseph Jefferson diamond medal for amateurs at a Chicago school of acting. Through his efforts she secured an engagement with E. H. Sothern.

"Now, I hardly think," said Mr. Frohman, "that a buxom young woman evidently intended in voice and physique for emotional acting would look well programmed as Miss Leit. The punsters would never stop speaking of the heavy work of Miss Leit."

MARGARET ILLINGTON.

"It's the only name I have," answered the young woman.

"Well, we'll just take the first syllable of Illinois and tack to it the last two of Bloomington and we'll have Illington, which runs smoothly, is not inapt and will keep your native place before your mind. What do you think?"

The newly christened Miss Illington gave assent, and the programme went to press.

The second change of name occurred later, when Miss Margaret Illington, otherwise Miss Maud Leit, became Mrs. Daniel Frohman.

"I shall not forget the first Christmas I spent in the United States," says Anna Held. "'A Parlor Match' company was in Pittsburg. I saw no signs of Christmas in the hotel except the money box of the elevator boy with wreaths around it, so I said, 'I will celebrate Christmas in Parisian style in the streets to benefit the poor.' My manager said he gave no benefits except for the Actors' fund, and nobody but millionaire theater managers gave benefits on holidays.

"'What! Are there no poor in Pittsburg?' said I.

"'Plenty of them,' he responded, 'but how are we to find them out?'

"'Eh, bien, very well.' I said; 'I will have my theater in the open; no lights but sunshine; no seats; standing room only, and everything free or give what you please.'

"'What is it, a winter circus?' said my estimable manager, with an irritating grin.

"'No matter. Order me a laudau. Now I shall show you my theater,' said I as the carriage rolled up to the door.

ANNA HELD.

"I invited several of the ladies of the company to join me for my drive, and our driver selected the most popular thoroughfares, and whenever he stopped I stood up in the carriage and sang, the ladies of our party extended the glad hand with a hat and the people on the streets responded generously. It was a brisk, cold day, but I sang an hour in the open air.

"I do not know exactly how much money was contributed, but the Pittsburg people were generous, and something over $800 was thrown into our carriage and afterward given to a charity fund.

"I shall never forget the picture of poor 'Old Hoss' Bill Hoey, then the funny man of our company, since gone to join the great majority. He stood on the curb, and as we halted and I sang he was my most attentive listener. As the song finished he impulsively threw his pocketbook into the carriage. I afterward learned accidentally that it contained his entire week's salary. Poor man! Peace to his memory! That was but a single instance of his characteristic generosity."

Joe Weber of Weber & Fields fame, who is now one of the stars of "The College Widower," has as good a wit off the stage as he has on, and he can parry the thrust of a manager with the same dexterity with which he can reply to the most insistent of the speculators that follow the show.

Recently a manager who is noted for not paying his debts and who thrives on bankruptcy proceedings met Weber and expressed his admiration for the cut of the new suit of clothes that the latter wore.

"Who is your tailor?" asked the manager.

Weber gave the name and address.

"I wish you would give me a letter to him," said the manager.

JOE WEBER.

"I'll write him a letter about you," answered Weber quickly.

Not long ago the comedian accompanied his wife to a store to inspect a cloak she had purchased, subject to his approval. The storekeeper met them with a glad smile, and Joe was formally introduced.

"Delighted to meet you, Mr. Weber," he said. "I have had the pleasure of seeing you often on the stage, but never outside the theater. By the way, here is my partner. Permit me to introduce you."

He called to his partner, who came forward, and the flustered storekeeper said:

"Mr. Blank, I want to introduce you to Mr. Weber. And this is his wife, Mrs. Fields!"

William H. Crane has been known for many years as a comedian, but this season he is playing a serious role—a laugh would spoil the performance. The character of Isadore Lechat in "Business Is Business" is very different from the roles in which the public is accustomed to seeing Mr. Crane. Yet the actor has made a success of it in spite of his fear that the serious scenes might be "queered" by a laugh in the wrong place. Actors are anxious to create merriment when the lines call for it, but nothing "rattles" them like a guffaw when the situation is more or less tragic. Speaking of his experience in changing from comedy to serious drama, Mr. Crane says:

W. H. CRANE.

"The one thing that particularly worried me the opening night was a fear that my mustache would come off. Yes, sir, I was afraid of my mustache. I was very warm. The perspiration was rolling from me in streams, and at the climax, as I lay groveling on the sofa with my face in my arms, the only thing I was really thinking about was whether or not that mustache would hold its own against the flood of perspiration that was deluging it. If when I raised my head that faithless mustache should drop off I well knew what the finish would be not only for me, but for the play also. The laugh I had been fearing all the evening would surely come then. Fortunately the glue held, but if the scene had been five minutes longer I don't believe I could have stood it. The next day I was all but ill."

Some years ago the late Edwin Booth was visiting at the home of Mr. Crane and took the latter's young son on his knee. The tragedian said:

"Well, my little man, I suppose you, too, want to be an actor when you are big enough?"

"No," answered the boy; "I don't want to be an actor when I grow up. I want to be like my Uncle Lawrence Barrett."

Ezra Kendall, who is starring in "Weatherbeaten Benson," is the originator of that time respected witticism regarding the seven reasons against marriage—"a wife and six children."

Many may not know that Kendall really has those seven reasons, and, so far as can be gathered, they are the occasion for great happiness to the comedian. There are four little male Kendalls and two dear little girls, and Papa Kendall certainly has a fine time with them at his Mount Vernon (N. Y.) home in the summer time. His wife was formerly Jennie Dunn and was a clever little actress before the duties of her household became extensive.

EZRA KENDALL.

Not long ago Mr. Kendall and a friend were entering a Chicago hotel when the latter pointed to a door on the left leading to the establishment of a fortune teller.

"There is where you get your palm read," remarked the friend.

"And right around here," quickly replied the actor, pointing to the barroom, "is where you get your nose red."

FEATS IN HORTICULTURE.

Luther Burbank and His Recent Remarkable Achievements.

Luther Burbank, the wizard of the plant world, cares more for benefiting mankind through his almost miraculous achievements than he does for mere money. Perhaps in recognition of this the Carnegie institution has granted him $10,000 a year for ten years by way of encouraging him in his experiments. Time and again scientific societies have honored him with medals and testimonials. About ten years ago he enjoyed a large income from his extensive business as a commercial seedsman and florist. But he gave this up to devote his time entirely to experiments in horticulture, and his seed farm at Santa Rosa, Cal., has been the scene of scientific investigations that will prove of great practical benefit to the world.

There may be some difference of opinion as to the value of Mr. Burbank's achievements in floriculture, but even those who are not impressed with the value of Mr. Burbank's "fadeless flowers" will acknowledge the worth of his stoneless plums and pitless prunes and especially his thornless and spineless cactus. The last named is perhaps his most important discovery, because the cactus grows profusely in arid regions, and its leaf would be suitable for food for both man and beast were it not for the prickliness that prevents its use in that capacity. But by patient study and numerous experiments in crossing and recrossing Mr. Burbank has developed a cactus in which the thorns are reduced to mere excrescences and whose leaves make excellent fodder for cattle and are palatable to the human taste as well. It is expected that the growth of this variety of cactus on arid lands will soon be undertaken.

Mr. Burbank was born in Massachusetts fifty-six years ago and established his fruit farm in California in 1875. It is said he has produced some 2,000 new varieties of plants. One of his most celebrated creations is the Burbank potato. His fadeless flowers retain indefinitely their freshness, color and perfume, and by perfection of the product the horticulturist expects to produce a blossom that may be worn on women's hats.

BAKER OF BROOKLYN.

A Congressman Whose Policy Has Earned Him Reputation as Objector.

Few congressmen achieve national reputation in a single term, as Robert Baker of Brooklyn has done. Baker leaped into fame by refusing a railroad pass, caused sensation after sensation in congress and was defeated at the polls recently when he sought re-election. Not long ago Representative Baker introduced a resolution demanding an inquiry into the conduct of Paul Morton, secretary of the navy, who while a railway official is said to have been a party to practices in alleged violation of the laws pertaining to interstate commerce. Mr. Baker objected recently to the resolution permitting the holding of the inaugural ball in the pension office and, justly or unjustly, has earned a reputation as the "kicker" of the house.

Mr. Baker was born in England in 1862. Before election to congress from the borough of Brooklyn he was prominent in reform movements in Greater New York. "It takes nerve," he said recently, "to stand on the floor of the house of representatives and know that while you are objecting to proposed legislation as the result of a deep conviction visitors in the galleries are nudging one another, saying, 'That's Baker, the Brooklyn crank.' I've been called a crank, and I know what it means. I know the ins and outs of crankism."

THE WOMEN WHO VOTE.

Their Elevating Effect on the Franchise in Colorado.

The statements as to what class of women voted in the equal suffrage states have been so notoriously conflicting that in the interest of settling a vexed question the New York Tribune had a representative in Denver observe the true state of affairs at the recent presidential election.

This report, appearing as it does in the pages of a great metropolitan journal that has not been particularly friendly to woman suffrage, ought to quiet the enemies and cheer the friends of equal suffrage. The reporter declares that Denver families go in groups to vote in polling places that are everywhere clean, sanitary and respectable, that the wealthiest precinct wore the air of a fashionable reception, that in the poorer districts laboring women went with their husbands and cast their votes with serious dignity and that the women voted in greater numbers than ever before.

As to that omnipresent bugbear of the conservative, the vote of the bad woman, this reporter sends no uncertain message. As a usual thing the disreputable women neither care to vote nor will vote if they can get out of it. Sometimes when an election is close they are obliged to vote to obtain police protection, but the reporter was informed by an old political worker that he had known whole colonies of disreputable women to leave the city on election day. Ward workers universally acknowledge that it is almost impossible to get them to go to the polls.

Considering that it takes thirty bad men to support one immoral woman, friends of good government cannot but wish that some means might be devised whereby the disreputable women when they leave the city on election day might be enabled to take the bad men with them.

WOMEN TAXPAYERS.

High New York State Officials Favor Giving Them the Ballot.

The women of New York state who have been working for the past three years for the passage of a bill allowing women taxpayers to vote at special tax elections in cities of the third class are much encouraged over the strong words of approval uttered by Governor Higgins in his message to the legislature and by Speaker Nixon in his address upon taking the chair as speaker of the house for the seventh time. Governor Higgins said:

"If the right to vote at tax elections is to be limited to property holders it would seem but an act of justice to extend that right to women property holders as well as to men."

In his address Speaker Nixon said:

"I recommend legislation to permit women taxpayers to vote on all tax propositions, and I believe that every community would be benefited by the votes of such women. They are a conservative, conscientious, patriotic and intelligent class, and the more voters of that kind we have at the polls the better for the commonwealth. They are asking only what is reasonable and right."

Women taxpayers already vote at special tax elections in all the towns and villages of New York, and it has been found they can be depended upon to vote for the uplifting and upbuilding of the community in which they live. Why it is that so many of the representatives at Albany have hesitated in giving women this simple justice is one of the mysteries of legislative halls and can only be guessed at. It would seem with both the governor and speaker of the house so strongly committed to the proposition there could be little excuse for longer denying women this right.

ELNORA MONROE BABCOCK.

DAUGHTERS OF LIBERTY.

The Suffragists of Today Are Animated by the "Spirit of Seventy-six."

Kentucky papers have recently chronicled the death of Mrs. Susan Stringer Bennett, "Kentucky's last and only Daughter of the American Revolution." Mrs. Bennett was the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier and perhaps the only one in Kentucky. But there are yet hundreds of Daughters of the American Revolution in Kentucky and in every other state of the Union, and their number increases daily.

The real Daughters of the American Revolution are those women who have the spirit of '76, who hate tyranny and who love justice.

You do not need to search any genealogical records to find out who these daughters are. Their names are written on the rolls of the Kentucky Equal Rights association, an organization of women which stands for the principle for which the men of '76 fought, "Taxation without representation is tyranny." The day will never come when it can be said of Kentucky that her "last and only Daughter of the American Revolution" is dead, and what is true of Kentucky is true of all her sister states.

Famous Folk Who Are In the News

ANDREW D. WHITE has had a remarkable career as an educator and diplomat, and now he is rounding out his active and useful life as a member of The Hague arbitration tribunal. He was chairman of the American delegation to the peace conference at The Hague and in the course of his many years of diplomatic service has often exerted his influence in behalf of international peace. Mr. White says that the time is ripe for peace negotiations between Japan and Russia and urges that the principle of "seconding nations," as adopted by the peace conference, could be used with advantage in an effort to end the war. His idea is that France should act as a second for Russia and the United States should assume such a position with respect to Japan. France and the United States could then approach each other and, on consultation with their principals, attempt to discover grounds for peace. Japan as victor, Dr. White thinks, could afford to make the first move in the direction of peace.

ANDREW D. WHITE.

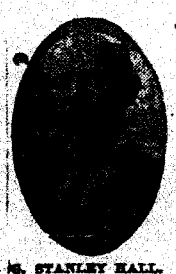
While President White was minister to Germany he received many queer letters. One day a letter came from an old woman who resided in the western part of the United States. In it she inclosed some small pieces of linen, with this novel comment:

"We are going to give a fair in our church, and I am making an autograph quilt. I want you to get me the autographs of the emperor, the empress and the crown prince and tell them all to be very careful not to write too near the edge of the squares, as a seam has to be allowed for putting them together."

John Mitchell, the labor leader, became interested in economic questions at a very early age. He was born at Braidwood, Ill., in 1869. His mother died when he was two years of age, and his father, who was a miner, was killed in a shaft when John was four. The orphaned boy was sent to school until he was ten and then put to work on a farm. At thirteen he went to work in a coal mine. He has been connected with organized labor since he was sixteen. He was elected president of the United Mine Workers in 1899 and has been several times reelected. One of his greatest achievements as a labor leader was the conduct of the anthracite coal strike in 1902, which resulted in arbitration of the difficulties by a board appointed by President Roosevelt.

JOHN MITCHELL.

Mr. Mitchell is apt at story and retort. He was once a guest at a dinner of the Clover club of Philadelphia. It is the rule of this organization to call upon its guests to speak and then to confuse them with interpolated remarks, but Mr. Mitchell could not be confused. The only notice he took of the Clover club's gibes was to say:



"I guess I could get along better with my speech here if I were deaf. It is often a good thing to be deaf. There is a deaf woman I know up in the coal regions.

"Once I went to see this woman, and she asked me to stay to tea. I thanked her and said I would, as I was not expected home before dark. She had been hearing pretty well up to this point, but now she got very deaf all of a sudden. She had to ask her daughter what I had said.

"'He said, mother,' explained the daughter, 'that he thanks you, but he can't stay, as he is expected home before dark.'

"At this the old woman looked relieved, and I departed."

President G. Stanley Hall of Clark university, Worcester, Mass., is a man of original and sometimes startling ideas. He gave the educators of Kansas a shock recently when in lecturing at Topeka before the State Teachers' association he not only advocated dancing and recommended that schoolteachers instruct their pupils in it, but gave a little exhibition of his own proficiency in the art by doing a few waltz steps on the stage. From a dignified gentleman of sixty, a graduate of a theological seminary and an authority on education and psychology, this was most unexpected. President Hall has a great reputation as a student of psychology and philosophy and has written much on these subjects. "Psychology" is a long word for some people. The Boston Herald relates that President Hall was once the guest of a club to whose members he was not as well known as he is to most Boston people and, having arrived late at the dinner, had but a few minutes' conversation with the chairman before being called upon to speak. His introduction was something like this:

G. STANLEY HALL.

"And now, ladies and gentlemen, I have the pleasure of presenting to you as the speaker of the evening Mr."—

Then there was a long pause, for the president had forgotten the name of his guest. The secretary was equal to the occasion, however, and, writing the name on the back of the menu card, passed it over, and the president went on:

"I have the pleasure of introducing to you as the speaker of the evening Mr. Hall, who comes to us from a new university in the east known as"—

Again the secretary came to the man's assistance, and once more he proceeded:

"Mr. Hall of Clark university is known as a"—

But this was too much for him, and this time even the secretary was unable to help him. Finally he blurted out:

"Well, I have chinned with him for about five minutes in this hall, and I shouldn't wonder, after all, if he had a little good horse sense."

Senator Thomas Collier Platt is much better known as politician than as business man. Nevertheless Senator Platt has been bank president, railroad president and for a quarter of a century the head of the United States Express company. About four years ago the senate committee on finance was discussing the question of abolishing a revenue tax on express money orders. The members of the committee were not familiar with express money order business, and Mr. Platt offered to enlighten them. Accordingly he excused himself for a moment and went to a neighboring office of his company, where he found a young clerk, of whom he demanded an express order for the sum of 5 cents. The boy was astonished at the smallness of the amount.

SENATOR PLATT.

"Yes," Senator Platt repeated, "I want a money order for 5 cents. I am the president of the company."

The agent appeared, and Senator Platt got his order, and in due time the members of the committee were enlightened as to the express money order business.

Lord Rosebery, ex-premier of Great Britain, is always amusing as an after dinner speaker. Here is a story of his about a gentleman who was traveling in America. Reaching a town in the southern states where there had been a desperate fracas between the whites and blacks, the former armed with shotguns, the latter with their usual weapons, razors, he went into a colored barber's shop for a shave.

"Say, John, your razor's very blunt!" he observed.

"Yes, sah," answered the man. "I was out last night, sah, with the boys."

In illustration of Lord Rosebery's ready wit it is related that he was walking one day in the grounds of Windsor castle when he chanced to meet her majesty Queen Victoria. Recognizing him, she stopped and spoke, beginning the conversation by a remark about the gloominess of the weather.

LORD ROSEBERY.

"Madam," said the courtly Rosebery, "it is always fine where you are."

Her majesty had a strong liking for Lord Rosebery, and he always seemed to make a hit when in her society. It is said he could have been a son-in-law to the Prince of Wales, now King Edward VII., but his ambition lay in another direction, to be Liberal premier of England, and as son-in-law to the monarch he could not have held this position. Instead of one of the daughters of the royal house he took as wife a daughter of a financial king, Miss Hannah Rothschild.

Henry White, secretary of the American embassy at London, who is said to be slated for a more important diplomatic post, has sometimes been called the most popular foreigner in England. Born in Baltimore and belonging to a family of wealth, Mr. White received a liberal education in America and Europe and began the study of law, but determined that he was not cut out for practice before the bar and therefore devoted himself to international law with the view of a diplomatic career.

Copyright, 1904, by Purdy, Boston.

HENRY WHITE.

In 1879 he married Margaret Stuyvesant Rutherford, a member of one of New York's "old families," and, with her fortune united to his own, the young couple were enabled to live at ease and entertain handsomely when Mr. White in 1883 was sent to Vienna as secretary of legation, although the salary paid Mr. White by Uncle Sam was a small one. A year later he was appointed second secretary of legation at London and in 1886 was advanced to the first secretaryship, which he has held until now with the exception of the four years of President Cleveland's second administration.

Mr. White's popularity with his English cousins once caused him some embarrassment. A London paper which desired to flatter him wound up a fulsome paragraph with the remark, "Mr. White has resided in London for so long a period as to have lost many American characteristics." This, from the standpoint of its author, was a compliment, but the remark is said to have occasioned the secretary, who is usually of excellent temper, a very bad humored half hour.

THE BALLOT'S BENEFIT.

How Colorado Women Reap Advantage From the Right to Vote.

Lillian Whiting, the well known journalist and literary writer, has spent considerable time in Colorado, where she has observed the general effect upon women of the responsibilities of full citizenship.

In a recent letter to the Washington Post she says:

"No one, I think, could pass any length of time in Colorado without being convinced of the inestimable value of political enfranchisement to women in its enlargement and stimulating of the intellectual life and its tendency to constantly and increasingly efface the trivial and the inconsequential with the significant, the interesting, the more important themes of thought and consideration. It was my privilege to pass several weeks of 1901 and again in 1903 and 1904 in the resplendent and beautiful Centennial State.

"No woman of ordinary intelligence could pass much time in Colorado without realizing the marvelous effect of the ballot on the women themselves in its enlargement of their intellectual life and the redeeming of conversational interests to a far more significant quality.

"The tone of conversation at women's lunches, at receptions, at clubs or in mere incidental meetings is so infinitely redeemed to a higher significance by the introduction of larger interests without in the least sacrificing the interests of those literary, educational, artistic and social concerns which in nonsuffrage states are the chief themes of thought and discussion among cultivated women.

"The charge of fraudulent voting is said by competent judges like Hon. Alva Adams to be infinitely less true of the woman's than of the man's vote. It is not to be claimed that women are all ideal creations, but it is justly to be claimed that higher and larger responsibilities are educative to both men and women."

NOT DANGEROUS TO WOMEN

Giving Them the Right to Vote Will Not Change Their Nature.

A recent editorial upon woman suffrage in the Pittsburg Gazette closes with this sentence:

"The only question is whether it is adapted to woman's nature to participate in politics, for no amount of education can make a woman more like a man than her grandmothers were."

The above sentence contains the sum total of the so called arguments against woman suffrage, the only trouble being that one class of opponents tell us women should not vote because they would become like men if they did so, and the other class, like the writer of this editorial, that women should not vote because no amount of education could make them like the men.

It seems impossible for some people to conceive of anything but a man in politics. It is the very fact that women are different from men and will always remain so that they need the ballot and our government in turn needs them.

Women have no desire to become like men nor vote like them. They want to be women and vote like women. Women, being specially interested in the spiritual, moral and home side of life, would look after these interests in our government.

Our commercial interests are already well looked after, but good men are in despair over the moral side of our political life.

Women are specially interested and strong along the lines in which our government is weak. Combine the vote of the man and the woman, and we have a complete whole. A government with men only to look after its interests is not complete any more than is a home with only men to look after it.

ELNORA MONROE BABCOCK.

WHAT WOMEN STAND FOR.

The Homes and the Housekeepers Should Be Represented In Politics.

The greatest obstacle to the establishment of equal suffrage is the inability of the average man or woman to appreciate the good that woman suffrage will accomplish. They say: "Are women wiser than men? Are they better qualified to administer public affairs?" We say "yes" and "no." They are different from men in character and environment, and that difference needs to be represented. Men stand for agriculture, manufactures and commerce. Women stand for the home, the children and the family. Now, the country is only an aggregation of homes, and politics is only housekeeping on a larger scale. Let the homes and the housekeepers be represented.

Why does war continue to decimate the human family?

Because women, the mothers of men, are unrepresented in government.

When will war cease?

When women, the mothers of men, have an equal voice and vote in public affairs.

HENRY B. BLACKWELL.

Women's Individuality.

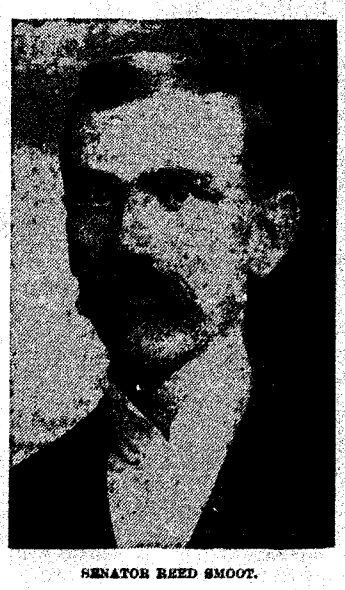
There are nice women, who must know better, who sign their letters as "Mrs. John B. Smith" instead of "Lucy M. Smith," as if indeed they had no individuality. Does a woman lose even her own name when she marries? It is really nothing but ignorance, but the number of times one meets this particular kind of ignorance is amazing.—Springfield Republican.

In view of the terrible corruption of our politics people ask, Can we maintain universal suffrage? I say no, not without the aid of women.—Bishop Gilbert Haven.

SHE LIKES OUR WAYS.

Daughter of Chinese Minister, Who Will Soon Make Her Debut.

There are many interesting and beautiful young women in diplomatic circles in Washington, but none more interesting than Miss Liang, the seventeen-year-old daughter of the Chinese minister, Sir Chentung Liang Cheng. Miss Liang is to make her debut before long and will be the first Chinese girl of high class to enter American society, it is said. She is very bright and progressive and eager to learn American ways.



MISS LIANG.

Her father, who is quite well Americanized and who played on an American baseball team when at school in the United States as a young man, has promised that she shall preside at the legation and mingle to some extent in the social dissipations of the capital when she is sufficiently instructed in the English language. She has already many privileges Chinese girls of high caste are not supposed to possess, her feet are not bound, and she walks like an American girl, but she is not permitted to adopt American attire, and her rich oriental costumes are made by a Chinese tailor connected with the legation.

THE SMOOT CASE.

The Mormon Senator and the Nature of the Charges Against Him.

Reed Smoot, who is known as the "Mormon senator," is the central figure in an investigation which has aroused much interest. The object is to determine the fitness of Senator Smoot for membership in the United States senate. The senate is the judge of the qualifications of its own members. The protests filed against Smoot's retention of his seat allege that as a Mormon apostle he cannot rightly fulfill the duties of a senator. It is charged that the Mormon hierarchy has violated its promise to refrain from dictation in political affairs and that its members in violation of law openly practice and encourage polygamy.

SENATOR REED SMOOT.

The Mormon church is governed by a priesthood, at the head of which stands the first presidency and the body known as the twelve apostles. As one of these apostles, it is held, Mr. Smoot is responsible for the policy and acts of the Mormon church. It is held also that by his oath as an apostle he owes his first allegiance to his church.

Senator Smoot was elected to the senate to succeed Joseph L. Rawlins and took his seat in March, 1903. He was born at Salt Lake City in 1862, attended the State university and the Brigham Young academy and began commercial life as clerk in a general store at Provo, Utah. At eighteen he was manager of the establishment. By rigid economy he saved $500, and, borrowing a few hundred more, he invested his capital in sheep. This proved a successful venture, and later he bought a drug store. He is now known as a banker and woolen manufacturer and owner of mining property. He became a Mormon apostle in 1900. He claims to be the husband of but one wife, who was Miss Alpha M. Eldredge and whom he married in 1884.

SELF DELUDED MEN.

They Are Those Who Deny Equal Rights to American Womanhood.

Is it not strange than men who look upon suffrage for themselves above all price and the denial of it the most severe punishment think nothing of denying it to women? They even go so far as to make women the butt of ridicule who happen to be brave enough to express a desire for this right of citizenship, which is freely given to the most ignorant foreign man who comes to our shores.

How can men delude themselves into believing that what is ignominy unbearable for them is honor and glory for women? We have become so accustomed to this inconsistency that we think no more of it than the Chinese do of binding the feet of their girl babies.

Here we have an educated, moral, law abiding, tax paying class of people who are deeply interested in all that pertains to the welfare of their country and are equally affected with the men by good or bad government denied all voice in its affairs, and all this under a form of government that has for its battle cry, "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." Can any one conceive of a greater inconsistency?

ELNORA MONROE BABCOCK.

In quite early life I formed the opinion that women ought to vote, because it is right and for the best interests of the country. Years of observation and thought have strengthened the opinion.—Bishop Bowman.

Once Was Enough For Him.

A piano tuner in an uptown apartment had just settled down to his work when the woman of the house came into the room, dressed for the street.

"Are you going out?" he asked.

"Yes," she answered, with some surprise. "Why do you ask?"

"I heard you tell the maid when she went out a few minutes ago to be sure and be home by 10 o'clock."

"I did. It is her evening out."

"And there is nobody else in the apartment?"

"Certainly not," replied the woman, showing some irritation. "Are you afraid to stay here alone?"

"Sure, I am," answered the piano tuner, gathering up his tools, "and I don't mean to either. The firm does not ask us to unless we wish. I had my lesson two years ago. After I had worked in an apartment alone a man called to polish the furniture. He worked alone too. Next day several valuable articles were reported missing, and I was visited by the police. I knew I hadn't taken them. The furniture man swore he hadn't, and I believed him. It was a week of suspicion and misery for me and my family that I'll never forget. I take no more chances. I'll come back tomorrow when the maid is here."—New York Press.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

Discussion of Important Events in the Busy World During Past Two Weeks.

The Current Events Club met on Monday evening at the home of Prof. and Mrs. J. R. Fairgrieve. Chairman E. R. Redhead called the assemblage to order, and after the transaction of routine business, announced the leaders, Rev. A. H. Grant and Mrs. Thomas Hunter. Mrs. Hunter gave an excellent discourse on the life work of the late Theodore Thomas, one of the greatest orchestral leaders of the world and the foremost in the line of musical progress in the United States

Other musical celebrites received a share of attention.

MRS. HUNTER'S DISCOURSE.

Knowing that music is a subject seldom mentioned in this Current Events Club, I still think you will agree with me that it, with its many devotees, are world-moving factors, and I will present a few items in connection with this subject, hoping you may find them of interest.

First, I wish to tell you a little of the life, death and memorials of Theodore Thomas, one of the few great orchestral conductors of the world and the foremost leader of musical progress in the United States. You have probably all read of his recent death and know that it is considered a great calamity to the musical world. He was born in Essen, Hanover, Oct. 11, 1835. He is said to have started his musical career in this country as a first violin, in the Philharmonic Society of New York, and that was one year more than a half century ago.

Quoting from a friend's manuscript, "He had early imbibed that spirit of artistic devotion and adventure, which, together with his marvelous executive ability and disciplinary skill, made him the most potent agency for the spread of understanding and love for high class music that the world has seen." He played in the operatic and concert orchestras during the American engagements of Jenny Lind, Sontag, Mario and others. In 1862, he became conductor of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, and with it made many tours through the United States, stopping at all the large cities. He then founded an orchestra in Cincinnati and in 1873 he called into existence the May festivals that have made every year since great furors.

In 1879, he returned to New York and for twelve years after conducted the Philharmonic Societies of New York and Brooklyn. Finally, in 1891, he transferred his activities to Chicago, where he organized an orchestra and finally found the highest exemplification of his wonderful talents in the musical arrangements of the world's Columbian Exposition, of which he was musical director.

It is not easy to measure results of labor like those performed by Theodore Thomas, not always possible to see the true and full relationship between cause and effect, but when the length of service, which is to his credit is considered, the circumstance weighed, that not a single large city of the country has been left without frequent ministrations at his hand, and just importance is attached to the fact that it is his standard which prevails with the orchestras which have been organized in New York, Boston (and elsewhere—it seems only just to say that the most potent influence in the advancement of instrumental music in America was Theodore Thomas.

In 1889 a gala occasion at the Metropolitan was made—ever famous, old, Max Maretzek's fiftieth anniversary as opera conductor, under the leadership of Mr. Thomas and others of note. A similar jubilee was to have been enacted at the final philharmonic this Spring with Thomas as hero, after his fifty years as conductor. The intended jubilee book will now appear as his memorial. Two large volumes of another publication will be ready this Spring for the public reading. A great deal of the work was done by Mr. Thomas himself and just finished a few weeks before his death; the rest is compiled by George Upton, a life-long friend and well-known writer. Mr. Thomas enjoyed to the full the sweets of popular favor, and one of the greatest triumphs of his life was the dedication of the magnificent $800,000 hall to him. It is to be called the Thomas Hall and is to be the permanent home of his orchestra. The funeral was attended by crowds of eminent men and the church filled with flowers from all over the country. Few men leave behind them such wide-spread influence for the education and elevation of the people, for who shall say that music is not one of the greatest forces in the advancement of refinement and culture?

I shall never forget my own impressions of the wonderful orchestra under Mr. Thomas's leadership, especially the Lohengrin evening—the effect upon me was much as I would think a person might feel who had left all of every-day affairs and been transported to a region where all was beauty, goodness and joy.

Next, I thought to speak of Eugene Ysaye, wizard of the violin, a Belgian. Various reports estimate him from 6 feet 2, to 6 feet 6 inches in height and proportionate in size. He is visiting America after an absence of six years. One paper says of him, "It is remarkable that the greatest violinist the world has ever known; the man who has had showered upon him honors and decorations of kings and princes, and who could command a palace in any of the European capitals, is content to dwell in a little country town near the old battle ground of Waterloo, not many near him but his family. Ysaye is now in the fullness of his powers and at the zenith of his career, but he is a purely domestic temperament and an ardent follower of the simple life. To a crowded Carnegie Hall audience, immediately after his arrival he played with such wonderful beauty that the audience was said to have been entranced and after one number the applause lasted five full minutes and after another, eight minutes. He is without exception the highest priced instrumentalist who has ever visited the United States. The manager of the present tour pays him $100,000. His wife has accompanied him this time for the first.

Now I shall only speak of one more musician, and that is the little twelve-year old marvel, Frans Von Vercey. He is declared a wonder-child by the leading musicians of the day, both abroad and here at home. His repertoire is marvelous, all committed to memory, and his violin responds as though a supernatural thing; he incites the orchestras as well as audiences, and people are filled with amazement that such a little child's head could contain so much music and the little fingers perform its wonders. He is here under the management of Daniel Frohman, who pays him $1,500 a performance. The boy spends his spare time rolling a hoop and skating in the parks.

Mrs. Leslie Carter is making a decided sensation and creating great admiration in her portrayal of Adred in a drama of the same name. The character is tragic and is said to give full scope to the actresses great power; besides, the others in the cast at the Belasco rise to the occasion, and so the play is counted as one of the very best this season.

Rev. W. L. Sawtelle commented favorably on the work of Mr. Charles Atwood, who was showing remarkable judgment and tact as Rev. Samuel Green's successor in Grace Chapel work.

Rev. A. H. Grant reviewed events of importance which occurred in this busy world of ours during the past two weeks, dwelling especially on the attempted assassination of the Czar and the economic conditions existing in Russia; the French political situation; the law in relation to building in Berlin; John Temple Graves' opinion of Roosevelt, who was gaining the confidence and good will of the Southern States; Governor Douglas of Massachusetts, who had successfully effected a compromise between the manufacturers and workers at Fall River, and Governor Pennypecker's futile efforts to throttle the press of Pennsylvania.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Mary L. Emerick on Monday evening, Feb. 6. The leaders will be Prof. J. R. Fairgrieve and Mr. G. G. Chauncey.

Important Case Settled.

The suit of the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper Company against the United Box Board & Paper Company has been settled; the former concern returning all the stock, bonds and securities obtained from the latter, and takes back its paper mill in this city. The deed making this transfer was recorded in the County Clerk's office at Oswego on Thursday last.

Nearly two years ago the Oswego Falls Pulp & Paper Company started an action in the Supreme Court to recover the mill, stating as a cause of action that fraudulent representations were made to them when the combine was effected; that a conspiracy was entered into to defraud the plaintiff; that representations made in regard to assuming and discharging debts were false; and that plaintiff had no knowledge of the falsity of the claims prior to transfer of its property. Relief was asked as follows: That the conveyance and agreement be declared void; that the mortgage placed against the property be set aside; that an accounting be had for rents and profits. The matter came up before Justice Wright at the Trial Term in March last, and he held for the Oswego Falls plaintiffs, over-ruling a demurrer set up by the defendants and granting an interlocutory judgment for an injunction. A few weeks ago, when it became evident the case would soon come up for trial, negotiations for a settlement began, finally resulting in the return of the property to the former owners, and an agreement on the part of the United Box Board & Paper Company to care for the mortgage made about the time the property was purchased by them.

The property is, therefore, no longer in the trust, and will be run as an independent mill. The plant consists of a paper mill equipped with two paper machines of modern construction; a pulp mill and power house, and eight mill houses occupied by employes. The mill has a capacity of 100,000 pounds daily of finished product, consisting of newspaper and machine-dried boards. The officers of the company are Forest G. Weeks, president; Charles G. Weeks, vice-president; E. G. Weeks, Jr., secretary, and H. L. Paddock, treasurer and manager.

Victoria Paper Mills to Have a New Machine

The Victoria Paper Mill Company, of Fulton, has placed an order with the Beloit Iron Works of Beloit, Wis., for one of their most modern tissue machines. This will be installed in the Victoria No. 4 mill, the present 62 inch machine being thrown out.

The Victoria Paper Mills Company at present operates three machines, all running on fibre and bag papers. Some years ago the company turned out tissue paper from its No. 3 mill and its entry into the tissue business now will be only a renewal of old trade acquaintances.

The new machine consists of eight 90 inch dryers, 48 inches in diameter, and is a one cylinder machine. A seven roll stack of calendars is at the finishing end, and the whole will be driven by a 75 horse power engine. The speed changer will be of the cone type. To accommodate the machine considerable changes will be made necessary in the mill building, and as soon as weather permits this work will be commenced.

Two 1,500 pound iron tub beating engines, with iron bottoms, have been purchased from E. D. Jones & Company, of Pittsfield, Mass., for installation in connection with the new machine, and a 42 inch McCormack horizontal water wheel will be used to drive the beater line. This wheel has been ordered from the Rodney Hunt Machine Company of Orange, Mass.

The present 62 inch machine will be kept running until the first of June next, when the work of tearing out will actively begin. The new machinery will hardly be in operation before Winter, however, at which time the Victoria Paper Mills Company expects to make its new product of white ream tissue.—Paper Trades Journal.

Manufacturer's Association Confer

The Manufacturers' Association, representing the owners of water power at the lower dam, held a meeeing last Saturday in the office of the Volney Paper Company to discuss the 1000-ton barge canal project and also to select a delegation to appear before the Advisory Board of the State at its next hearing in Albany. Word was received from the authorities at Albany that the hearing scheduled for Monday had been postponed and that as soon as a date was decided upon ample notice would be sent the Fulton manufacturers, so that they would have an opportunity of being present at the conference. Engineer Bond was in Fulton last Saturday and made a personal inspection of the upper and lower dams.

A large delegation of the owners of water-power went to Albany this morning to confer with the Advisory Board.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Absolutely Harmless.

The fault of giving children medicine containing injurious substance is sometimes more disastrous than the disease from which they are suffering. Every mother should know that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is perfectly safe for children to take. It contains nothing harmful and for coughs, colds and croup is unsurpassed. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Its Chief Merit.

Clara—I don't see why you liked that group picture of our society. It wasn't particularly good of you. Isabelle—I know it, but it was so perfectly horrid of that conceited Miss Gushing.—Detroit Free Press.

Amazed.

Newman—I met your wife today for the first time, and, for one thing, I found she was outspoken. Henpeck—You surprise me! By whom?—Philadelphia Press.

Cured His Mother of Rheumatism.

"My mother has been a sufferer for many years from rheumatism," says W. H. Howard of Husband, Pennsylvania. "At times she was unable to move at all, while at all times walking was painful. I presented her with a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and after a few applications she decided it was the most wonderful pain reliever she had ever tried, in fact she is never without it now and is at all times able to walk. An occasional application of Pain Balm keeps away the pain that she was formerly troubled with. Sold by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

A Souvenir Spoon.

Aunt Jane—Edith, didn't I see Mr. Sweetser kissing you in the hall last night? Edith—Yes, but it was only in remembrance of former days. Aunt Jane—A sort of souvenir spoon, I suppose you mean.—Boston Transcript.

Sarcastic.

Buggins—See here, porter, this mirror is so dusty I can't see myself in it. Hotel Porter (who has just been tipped by Buggins)—Strikes me you ought to be mighty thankful, 'stead of makin' a fuss about it.—London Tit-Bits.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND.

Colorado's Just Judge Re-elected by the Votes of Women.

Judge Lindsey of the Denver juvenile court has been re-elected by a plurality of more than 50,000 votes. Mrs. Florence Kelley, secretary of the National Consumers' league, writes:

"This insures to the children of Denver the continued care of the man who secured the Colorado law that any adult contributing to the delinquency of a child is himself a delinquent and may be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both.

"No one has ever brought to light as Judge Lindsey has done the extent to which men and women profit sordidly by the tempting of children. Junk dealers buy stolen goods of them; cigarette dealers and saloon keepers sell wares to them; telegraph and messenger companies send them to infamous places, and low theaters sell them tickets. And in most communities the thoughtless public acquiesces when the children are punished. Judge Lindsey places such young offenders on probation and with them the parent whose neglect may have made the children easy prey. But for the sordid men and women who have profited by the temptation of the children there are fines or jail sentences.

"How is it that a judge who encounters such powerful political forces as the saloon keepers, the cigarette trust and the telegraph companies can be elected by such pluralities? It is because he has the good fortune to live and work in a city where women vote. The defender of tempted children is kept permanently in office by the votes of the mothers, the teachers and the other intelligent women of Denver."

KEPT OUT OF THEIR OWN.

How Home Makers and Preservers Lose Their Natural Rights.

I wonder if it ever occurs to the august gentlemen who write up national bills in which occur "the extension of suffrage to all" except "on account of illiteracy, minority, sex, conviction of felony, mental conditions or residence" that they are taking away the natural rights of the first makers and preservers of home, industrial and village life? For with women began the home, with women began industry, and with women began the village. While these three things were evolving under the toil and loving patience of the woman her lord and master was upon the battlefield or in the heart of the forest killing something. His nature was ever to dissipate, destroy; his mate's was to conserve and build up.

And man has never got over his habit of fighting. There are no forests today, and real wars are of too infrequent occurrence to keep him constantly engaged, so he is adapting himself to the industry that women began in their wigwams and huts, and the remainder of his time he spends in fighting women's rights in municipal and national affairs.

It is not a very dignified spectacle to contemplate, this of man actually forcing her out and saying "Thou shalt not" to the very creature who made his present methods of life possible.

Maybe some day he will come to see himself as others see him. Meantime let every woman come to a recognition of her own.

JOSEPHINE CONGER.

The Jap Baby.

How do you suppose the babies in Japan take an airing? In baby carriages, you say? Of course not. The Japanese never do anything the way we do it. When the baby's about three days old it goes out for its first glimpse of the world strapped on somebody's back, and that's the way it goes every day till it can go on its own feet. Sometimes its mother or its nurse takes it, but very often it rides on the back of a brother or sister, who is perhaps not more than four or five years old. These little nurses don't seem to be troubled at all by their charges, as you would suppose. They play ball and tag and run races and fly kites in spite of the heavy loads on their backs. What is more remarkable, the babies are perfectly happy and hardly ever cry, though when their young nurses run with them the poor babies' faces bang back and forth against their caretakers' shoulders till an American baby would howl with pain and rage.—Bertha Runkle in St. Nicholas.

Why She Turned Vegetarian.

An English countess who has many American friends recently became a vegetarian. The other day in a letter to New York she accounted for her abandonment of flesh food.

"Not long ago," she wrote, "I visited a slaughter house.

"I can't tell you how everything was stained deep with blood; how there arose from the drenched, dark floors the peculiar odor of blood.

"As I was hurrying away three beautiful lambs were led in by a man with a long, shining knife. Filled with pity and indignation, I said:

"'How can you be so cruel as to put those innocent little lambs to death?'

"'Why, madam,' said the man, 'you wouldn't eat them alive, would you?'"

The Original Fruit Canners.

We are indebted to Pompeii for the great industry of canned fruit. Years ago, when the excavations were just beginning, a party of Cincinnatians found in what had been the pantry of a house many jars of preserved figs. One was opened, and they were found to be fresh and good. Investigation showed that the figs had been put into jars in a heated state, an aperture left for the steam to escape and then sealed with wax. The hint was taken, and the next year fruit canning was introduced into the United States, the figs being imported with that in view.

A Story of Tom Marshall.

Tom Marshall, Kentucky's famous wit, attended a phrenologist's lecture one night. Marshall had been drinking, and when he returned to his hotel after the lecture he drank more. The drink gave him belief in his phrenological powers, and he declared that he could "read" heads as well as the lecturer. So it was decided to test his skill upon some of the guests of the hotel. Both ladies and gentlemen assembled in the parlor, and Marshall, who knew most of them, furnished an hour's uproarious fun by hitting off their failings. When he had finished an empty headed dandy whose head had not been examined loudly and pompously called attention to the fact that Marshall had neglected him. "I beg your pardon, sir," said Marshall, "but you must really excuse me. I am too drunk to read small print by candlelight."—Argonaut.

A Visit From the Bayleys.

The servant at No. 1 told the servant at No. 2 that her master expected his old friends, the Bayleys, to pay a visit, and No. 2 told No. 3 that No. 1 expected to have the Bayleys in the house every day, and No. 3 told No. 4 that it was all up with No. 1 and that they couldn't keep the bailiffs out, whereupon No. 4 told No. 5 that the officers were after No. 1 and that it was as much as he could do to prevent himself from being taken in execution and that it was nearly killing his poor, dear wife, and so it went on increasing and increasing until it got to No. 33 that the detective police had taken up the gentleman who lived at No. 1 for killing his poor, dear wife with arsenic and that it was confidently hoped and expected that he would be executed, as the facts of the case were very clear against him.—London Mail.

Contracted Chronic Diarrhoea While in the Philippines.

"While with the U. S. Army in the Philippines, I contracted chronic diarrhoea. I suffered severely from this terrible disease for over three years and tried the prescriptions of numerous physicians, but found nothing that did me any good until I tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, two small bottles of which entirely cured me and I have since had no return of the disease."—Herman Stein, 212 N. Bad Case.

A London curate the other day received an astonishing answer to an inquiry after a parishioner's health.

"Well, sir," said the parishioner, "sometimes I feels anyhow; sometimes I feels nohow, and there be times when I feels as stiff as a himmidge!"—Smith's Weekly.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy the Best Made.

"In my opinion Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best made for colds," says Mrs. Cora Walker, of Porterville, California. There is no doubt about its being the best. No other will cure a cold so quickly. No other is so sure a preventive of pneumonia. No other is so pleasant and safe to take. These are good reasons why it should be preferred to any other. The fact is that few people are satisfied with any other after having once used this remedy. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Caterpillars of Sikim.

In the sal-tree forest of Sikim, in the tropical gorge of the Teesta, is one of the breeding grounds of the myriad butterflies that swarm over the country. A famous traveler says that in May and until the middle of June the tender leaves of the great sal-trees are literally alive with voracious caterpillars. The presence of these caterpillars in such overwhelming numbers is explained by the fact that they are distasteful to birds. Fowls that were offered them rejected them after a trial with disgust and went on wiping their bills for some time afterward. There are two species, one a bright coral and the other green with stripes. They can break their fall from the tall trees by letting themselves down on long silky threads.

CIVILIZATION'S DEMAND.

Women's Morality and Idealism Are Needed In Legislation.

Rev. Dr. Rainsford of St. George's church, New York, calls attention to the many reasons why women should receive the ballot. He says:

"Whether we greet it with dismay or hopefulness, one of the results of our civilization is that legislation is entering on spheres which are peculiarly woman's. Once upon a time legislation chiefly had to do with protection of property. Now we legislate about homes, sanitary questions, education, relations to labor and capital, licensing questions, the drink trade, etc., all moral questions that in the most intimate way affect the home as well as the outside interests of life, and questions on which woman is not only a judge, but decidedly the best judge. It is most unreasonable and unfair that in these questions where experience is vital and all her tenderest interests are immediately affected her influence should be confined to an indirect influence, and her vote, if recorded at all, only recorded through pressure on her husband or her sons.

"Life has a way of outgrowing law in this world, and when it does law must fit itself to life. We legislate on a hundred things our fathers never dreamed of legislating on.

"Today the life of our women has grown wider, has led them up to this point where they come asking the suffrage, and neither common sense nor the interests of the nation will permit its being refused to them.

"Politics and political science must soon be seen as they are—a living and ennobling effort to carry into the life of mankind principles of highest morality, and so to raise and keep aloft men's lives as well as to defend men's pockets.

"In bringing about this better view and better way I am very sure the morality and idealism of American womanhood must find their place. And so, for my part, I have done and will do what in me lies to win for the womanhood of our nation a voice in its fateful councils."

THE above picture of the man and fish is the trademark of Scott's Emulsion, and is the synonym for strength and purity. It is sold in almost all the civilized countries of the globe.

If the cod fish became extinct it would be a world-wide calamity, because the oil that comes from its liver surpasses all other fats in nourishing and life-giving properties. Thirty years ago the proprietors of Scott's Emulsion found a way of preparing cod liver oil so that everyone can take it and get the full value of the oil without the objectionable taste. Scott's Emulsion is the best thing in the world for weak, backward children, thin, delicate people, and all conditions of wasting and lost strength.

What Becomes of Pins.

Although we are told when the question is asked, What becomes of pins? that they fall to the earth and become terrapins, a gentleman has gone to some trouble to find out that this is not so and to give us the correct answer. He has found that pins are resolved into dust. Hairpins which he watched for 154 days disappeared by rusting away at the end of that time. Bright pins took nearly eight months to disappear, polished steel needles nearly two years and a half; brass pins had little endurance; steel pens were nearly gone at the end of eighteen months, though their wooden holders were still intact.

CHARITY BALL

Management Elated over Success Attending Their Efforts.

There is every indication that the Charity ball, which will be given in aid of the City Hospital on Tuesday, Feb. 7, will be a most pronounced success, and the management is elated over the willingness exhibited by our citizens to aid in every possible way. The Knights of the Maccabees have donated the use of their hall; Mrs. T. D. Lewis has tendered the use of the dining rooms in the Hotel Lewis for the serving of refreshments and our merchants and citizens in general have shown a kindly spirit in meeting the solicitating committee.

The list of patronesses and the places on the reception, refreshment, decorating and floor committees are about complete and will be announced in a few days.

Webb's full orchestra will furnish the music.

The price of single tickets is $1.00; these have been placed on sale through the following committee: E. J. O'Brien, Claude Guile, Ward Eastman, F. W. Richardson, D. Lipsky, B. J. O'Grady, T. H. Webb, W. H. Hornibrook. No complimentary tickets will be issued.

Those who cannot attend the ball can hand any sum they might desire to give to the managers, W. H. Hornibrook and T. H Webb, who will place the same in the general fund to be given the hospital.

REVOLUTION GROWS THROUGHOUT RUSSIA

There was no bloodshed in St. Petersburg yesterday, but the condition of affairs there has not improved, and in other of the large cities of Russia matters appear rapidly to be assuming a critical phase.

In Moscow, particularly, the outlook is threatening, the strike there having become general, while the revolutionary spirit seems to dominate.

A proclamation in the name of Father Gopon has been circulated inciting to the use of bombs, dynamite or any weapon whatsoever against the members of the government, who, it is asserted, outlawed themselves by the course that was adopted against the workmen of St. Petersburg Sunday.

The office of governor-general of the city and government of St Petersburg has been created by imperial order, with extraordinary powers for dealing with the existing condition of affairs, and General Trepoff, whose administration of the office of chief of police of Moscow brought upon him sentence of death from the revolutionary party, has been appointed to the post.

In spite of the repressive measures, however, the liberal spirit seems undaunted, for in Moscow Prince Galitzin, who recently resigned the mayoralty in protest against the imperial ukase comdemning the reform programme, has been again chosen mayor by the Municipal Council by a vote of 113 to 10.

Cavalry and infantry patrols were all that were to be seen at midnight in the streets of of St. Petersburg and Moscow.

Rogers, of Fulton. Burial at Oswego, on Tuesday morning.

On Wednesday, Jan. 18, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ella Newton, at Ingalls Crossing, occurred the death of Mrs. Eunice J. Littlefield at the age of 73 years. The funeral was held from the house on Saturday morning. Burial will be made at Granby Rural cemetery. The members of the Grange attended the services in a body.

Harry Lathrop, aged 28, died in Auburn on Saturday and the remains were brought to this city for interment in Mt. Adnah. The deceased was a son of the late Eugene Lathrop, and he is survived by one sister, Mrs. E. J. Hogan of Denver, Col. The young man was a magician by profession and adopted the stage name of Harry St. Cyr.

On Thursday morning at 5 o'clock, at the home of her sister, Mrs. Helen Emens, occurred the death of Mary L. Byington, after a period of ill health that had been continous from childhood. The immediate cause of death was heart disease. The deceased was well known to our residents, and her cheeriness, ambition and courage in the face of physicial suffering, had won for her many friends, all of whom sincerely regret her demise. The funeral services which were largely attended were held from the late home on Saturday afternoon, the Rev. John Richards officiating. Three sisters survive. The remains were placed in Mt Adnah receiving vault and in the Spring they will be interred in the family lot in [illegible] cemetery.

Delinquent Taxpayers Paying Up.

City Attorney Mead is making excellent progress in the collection of taxes which have been owing the city for three or four years. The street railway company, whose indebtedness amounted to between $4,000 and $5,000, has agreed to settle this week; other delinquents are showing a like desire to pay up; those who do not will be sued. The attorney believes that if the plans of the Board of Public Works can be carried out, which now seems probable, and the retirement of $8,000 of water bonds effected, it will be possible to issue $10,000 worth of sewer bonds, which will materially relieve the present situation and the building of the sewers on the west side can be carried on.

BEFORE STATE ADVISORY BOARD

Upper and Lower Dam Interests Represented—New Facts Presented By Lower Dam Committee—Immediate and Amicable Settlement Sincerely Desired.

There can be little doubt that an amicable adjustment of the contention of our manufacturers over the raising of the upper and lower dams will be reached when it is understood that a sense of fairness prevails in the councils of those who are qualified to deal with the question.

A conference of the manufacturers of this city was held last Wednesday with the Advisory Board of the State. Those who represented the upper dam were Messrs. Weeks, Paddock, Weeden and two engineers from Boston. Collector Stranahan of New York and Ex-Attorney General Hancock of Syracuse presented the argument in favor of the upper dam interests.

The lower dam was not represented by counsel, but the discussion, which was a very animated one, was participated in by Messrs. E. R. Redhead, G. G. Chauncey, F. A. Emerick, B. W. Bennett and J. H. Howe. The interested spectators and owners of water-power present were Messrs. C. C. Benedict, A. G. Gilbert, Frank Dilts, George E. True, G. J. Emeny, T. H. Webb, Thomas Hunter and James Hunter of this city, and Messrs. F. O. Clark, R. A. Downey and Judge Merrick Stowell of Oswego.

In response to inquiries by a TIMES representative this week regarding the recent conference at Albany, Mr. Chauncey stated:

"We presented to the Advisory Board some new facts, one in particular, which showed that if the lower dam were not raised as planned, and the Oswego Canal were lowered to the level of the present dam, it would mean a loss of 48 per cent. of the power to the manufacturers at the east end of the lower dam, mainly for the reason that the Oswego Canal, which is intended to deliver water to our hydraulic race could not deliver the necessary quantity. The bulkhead has openings amounting to 299 square feet. This opening is at present inadequate. In its lowered condition the Oswego Canal could only deliver sufficient water to fill an opening of 155 square feet.

"To me," continued Mr. Chauncey, "it is strange that men should jeopardize the expenditure of $1,250,000 within our city limits. The work, as planned, would give the manufacturers of Fulton approximately 2,000 additional horse-power. This, at $20 per horse-power per year, would mean a yearly value of $40,000, which is 10 per cent. on $400,000. The State officials have been very liberal in this respect.

"The chairman of the Advisory Board, Mr. Bond, stated that in the construction of the entire Barge Canal the work through Fulton would be the most difficult. The Board is satisfied that the resident engineer, Mr. Cushman, has solved the problem, and with fairness to the power-owners and the State.

"The Advisory Board may conclude to change the location of the lock at the upper dam, as planned. I cannot say what the result of the delay will be. It will certainly take at least six weeks to prepare the new plans.

"Every person, from Oswego to Mud Lock, should be interested in furthering this work, not only because of the improvement to the water-power, but because it means new life to the Oswego Canal.

"When the Georgian Bay Canal is completed, I believe some of the traffic from the West will come by Lake Ontario and Oswego for New York and eastern points.

"We have presented the facts to the Advisory Board," said Mr. Chauncey in conclusion, "and I believe all parties are desirous of an immediate settlement of the contention—certainly those on the lower dam are. Delay at this juncture of the proceedings may prove disastrous, as it would probably prevent the letting of the contract for this section this year, which would certainly be prejudicial to home interests."

Engineers Allen and Holmes, representing the State Advisory Board, were in Fulton on Monday and Tuesday, and together with the corps of resident engineers, proceeded to make a survey of the tail races and wheel-pits.

It is now considered probable that an additional hearing will be given Fulton manufacturers to-morrow, Thursday. If the hearing is general, all manufacturers will attend; if by committee, then Hon. Theodore Hancock, Messrs. H. L. Paddock and F. E. Weeden will represent the upper dam interests and Messrs. F. A. Emerick, George G. Chauncey and J. H. Howe, the lower dam.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Refreshing Showers of Rain Insures Good Grain and Fruit Crop—Interesting Trip Along Foothills.

Mr. W. J. Pentelow, who is located at Corona, California, has sent the following letter, dated Jan. 20, 1905, to a friend in this city:

"Wonders have not ceased in California. One week ago last Sunday night it rained hard all night and Monday forenoon. Last Sunday night it rained again and lasted until nearly noon on Monday. Last night, at some hour, it commenced again and is still raining at 10 a. m. There must have fallen in the past three weeks seven or eight inches of water; just think of it, considerable more than has fallen in the past seventeen or eighteen hundred years. It makes all California smile broadly.

The Gaylords and ourselves intended to start for Pomona and Ontario last Monday morning early, but the rain detained us at home until 2 p. m., when it looked as though it was going to clear up, so we started, keeping close to the foot-hills all the way. We found it quite muddy some of the way, which is quite remarkable for this country, but we saw on both sides of the road, for miles as far as the eye could reach, great fields of grain up, and coming up, looking so fresh and green; not a tree nor house to break the view. Thousands upon thousands of acres—the whole valley from thirty to fifty miles wide and well up on the sides of the mountain is sown to grain. We saw many plowing. The plows have a triangular or three cornered frame, with the broad end at the front, two wheels on the end, one larger than the other, to run in the furrow, and one wheel in the rear, which supports from four to six plows, drawn by six and eight horses. It would seem to me that they would be able to get around the field but once in a day. The bountiful rain of the past three weeks has encouraged the people to plow, and sow every foot of ground. They tell me that if it should not rain again this year, enough has fallen to insure a good crop of grain; so you see this bids fair to be the most prosperous year that California has seen in ages. The orange crop is bringing much better prices this Winter, and the prospects are so bright for a good grain and fruit crop for another year that the people generally feel happy and jubilant.

We arrived at Pomona a little past 5 p. m. and took dinner and lodging for the night at one of those large, tourist hotels, for which Southern California is so justly noted. Pomona is a very pretty city of about 7,000 inhabitants, four banks and as large fine stores as can be found in any large eastern city; streets asphalted and curbed. We left Pomona on Tuesday morning about 8 o'clock and drove over a fine asphalted road for six miles, on each side fine residences and large and beautiful orange and lemon groves, arriving at Ontario near 9 a. m. We found this a place of about 5,000 inhabitants, but not near so pleasant or progressive as Pomona. We spent the forenoon at the nursery, selecting trees and shrubs for our places. I have now over fifty different varieties of roses and several kinds of vines which grow to such perfection here and are loaded with lovely flowers. We left Ontario about 1 p. m. and drove nearly directly across the valley to Corona, arriving there about 4 p. m.

Pomona lies north and west of Corona across the Valley and well on to the foot hills of the range of mountains on the north side of the valley, while Ontario lies on the same foothills six miles east of Pomona, and Corona lies at the foothills on the south side of the valley and under the range of mountains on that side.

I am trying an experiment in irrigating my lawn. Am digging trenches across the ground where I intend to have my lawn, six feet apart, and placing in these trenches porous drain tile about four to six inches deep, these tile I intend to fill with water and in that way irrigate my lawn from the bottom instead of spraying on top. Of course it is a new idea for this country but I am inclined to think that it will work, but can tell better after trying it.

I called on a neighbor last evening who had a cluster of bananas growing in his yard, which has two blossoms and two bunches of bananas on them now. I begged a plant, so expect next year to have bananas.

I have dug a trench 100 feet in length another 50 feet and placed some fertilizer at the bottom, and in these trenches I shall set my roses. If you come out here next winter you will be able to pick roses to your heart's content. It is still raining hard and lots of water is falling, if it continues much longer we shall be in as bad condition as you are at times when it rains continually for months, with no ray of sunshine.

W. J. PENTELOW.

CHARITY WHIST.

Financial and Social Success Notwithstanding Severity of Weather.

The Charity Whist given last Wednesday afternoon and evening, under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Fulton City Hospital, at the home of Mrs. Wettengel, was a financial and social success. There was an attendance of at least fifty, notwithstanding the severity of the weather and the absence from the city of a large number of gentlemen who were at a conference of the State Advisory Board at Albany. This fact necessitated many of the ladies taking the part of gentlemen in the game. There were two first and two second prizes given in the afternoon and evening. The use of Mrs. Wettengel's home was cheerfully donated, and the management is extremely grateful to Mrs. Wettengel for her kindness and also for the dainty refreshments, which were served at both sessions. Thanks are also due Brown & Hunter for use of tables and chairs; also Messrs. O'Brien, Katz and Lasher for courtesies shown. The amount realized from the entertainment was $19.

The prizes awarded in the afternoon were as follows: Miss Charlotte David secured first prize, a sack of Ajax flour, donated by A. M. Seymour; Mrs. B. S. McKinstry, a pair of embroidery scissors, from A. J. Snow's; Miss Franc French, second prize, a box of Huyler's chocolates from Thomas Coates' confectionary store; Mrs. G. W. Morton, bottle of olives, from James Brannan. The consolation prize was won by Mrs. F. Jess Newton—box of confectionary from Frank LaPorte.

In the evening, Mrs. T. D. Lewis won first prize, a Boston fern, given by Mr. Charles Wetherby; Mrs. S. B. Mead, a tabouret, donated by Mrs. Edward Cole. The two second prizes for ladies were won by Miss Marguerite Case—a vase donated by Jeweler O. P. Davis; Mrs. Charles David—a box of Lowney's bonbons donated by Mr H. P. Allen.

The first gentlemen's prize was won by Mr. B. S. McKinstry—a cigar case from Conley Brothers; Miss Edith Hamilton—a pair of driving gloves, given by Mr. F. G. Lamphere; second, Mr. Frank Porter—shaving mug from R. E. Phillips' drug store; Mr. Frank Dilts—clothes brush, donated by Druggist E. A. Putnam. The consolation prize was won by Mrs. Mary Butler—a bottle of perfume from Briggs & Gayer's establishment.

Early Morning Fire.

On Sunday morning at 6 o'clock the residence of Mr. Charles Foster on Fay street was totally destroyed by fire. The origin of the fire is unknown. There was an insurance of $300 on the building, held by the Niagara Fire Insurance Company of which Whitaker & Lovejoy are the agents. The contents were not insured.

"The Clansman" by Thomas Dixon, only $1.08, at Lasher's book store.

BUILD TO FULTON SOON.

Lakeside Extension Begun This Summer if All Goes Well—Legal Complications to Be Straightened Out First, But When This Is Done, the New 11-Mile Road Will Be started.

[Syracuse Herald, Jan. 30.]

It was said to-day by a member of the syndicate which is to own the Syracuse, Lakeside & Baldwinsville railroad, that if the legal complications holding up the transfer of the bonds can be cleared up within a couple of months actual construction work on the extension to Fulton will be started this Summer. If work can be begun early enough the eleven miles between Baldwinsville and Fulton will be built. Otherwise the extension will be carried no further than Phoenix, six miles.

The United States Mortgage & Trust Company of New York is trustee for the Lakeside bonds. When it gets ready to sell them on foreclosure proceedings the Beebe syndicate will be able to get absolute control of the physical property, as well as the paper, and will be in shape to go ahead with the long sought development of the electric railroad business northward from Syracuse.

General Manager W. B. Rockwell of the Lakeside, who is also a member of the Syracuse & Ontario Railroad company, composed of interests almost identical with the Lakeside's organizers, said this morning that it probably would require about $400,000 to construct and equip the extension of the Lakeside to Fulton. The new owners of the road, of course, will acquire the franchises and rights of way held by the Syracuse & Ontario Company, and as the projected line will be an extension and not a new road, there will be no obstacles to be expected. The certificate of extension has already been granted by the State Board of Railroad Commissioners. It was stated that no serious engineering difficulties are to be encountered.

NEW CORPORATION.

Fulton Milk Producers' Association Will be the Title

At an adjourned meeting of the Oswego County Milk Producers' Association, held last Saturday in the City Hall, it was decided to merge the former into a corporation to be known as the Fulton Milk Producers' Association, with a capital stock of $10,000. The officers of the new association are:

President, C. C. Wilcox.
Secretary, V. W. Shattuck.
Treasurer, Noah Merriam.

Directors: F. I. Palmer, George Adams, G. S. Piper, George Coles, W. I. Carrier, W. H. Owens, Charles Hess, F. L. Hess, Omer Gregg.

An agreement was entered into by those present to take considerable stock in the new corporation, and an adjournment was taken until Saturday, Feb. 11, when the papers of incorporation would be returned from Albany.

West Side Sewer Bonds.

An arrangement has been entered into between the Board of Public Works and the officers of the Fulton Savings Bank for the sale of $15,000 worth of west side sewer bonds. Water bonds amounting to $8,000 have recently been paid by the Board of Public Works, and it is the intention to apply the back taxes that are being collected on some certificates of indebtedness, which are held by the First National Bank. This will reduce the city's indebtedness by about $10,000. It is thought by the time the money is paid out it will be possible to issue more bonds.

The Common Council will meet to-night to take action in regard to the foregoing.

The Cooking School.

The absence of Mrs. Elizabeth Jewitt, conductor of the Cooking school, renders it impossible to have the lesson as appointed for tomorrow (Thursday) afternoon. The exact time for this lesson cannot now be stated, but due and timely notice will be given.

The Commercial Times of the date named contained the following comment on the record of the regiment:

"The record of the gallant Twenty-fourth speaks for itself. Since this war began, no regiment has gone into a fight, and come out with a heavier loss in proportion to the number engaged. Major Barney, who was beloved by the whole regiment fell while leading his men up a hill for the purpose of charging the enemy behind a railroad track. While waving on his men, he suddenly fell backward off his horse, and the horse went on into the the midst of the enemy. He died a hero's death.

"Suffice it to say here, that the Twenty-fourth fought like heroes and deserve the everlasting gratitude of the people of Oswego and of the whole country. May God comfort those who have lost friends and relatives in the fearful fight! They fell in the noblest cause that ever stimulated the heart or nerved the arm of mortal man.

"For the above list we are indebted to Adjutant Oliver, of the Twenty-fourth, who reach the city to-night.

"The total list of casualties is as follows: Killed, 30; wounded, 74; missing, 124. Of those reported missing twenty had returned at the time the Adjutant left Washington and that up to that time the total list of missing would be 104. It was believed that many others would yet make their appearance. Of the wounded, a large number were but slightly hurt. The Adjutant himself escaped but carries the marks of bullets in his uniform. He is exhausted from overworry and the constant anxiety and excitement he has endured, and is not yet in a condition to receive his friends."

One of the survivors of the regiment says, that of the list of missing as printed above, the following, as he recollects, were afterwards accounted for: Lieutenant P. Clary, Company F, was taken prisoner; Lieutenant J. A. Brown, Company B, was left wounded on the field and afterwards died in Washington; Lieutenant Duncan Campbell, Company I, was wounded and taken prisoner; Sergeant P. Salmon and Private W. H. Garland were taken prisoners; Private John Lappin was wounded through the body and was afterwards found in Washington; Willis Rogers was shot in the foot; John Mott, Company A, was left for dead on the field.

In the fight referred to, the regiment lost its colors. Three sergeants, who undertook to carry the colors forward were killed in rapid succession. Then Corporal Wing, who is still living in Fulton, raised the flag aloft and was shot through the body. The colors were then captured by the rebels.

SUCCESSFUL FARMING.

Crops for Canning Factory---Paper Read by Bert L. Giddings of Baldwinsville at Farmers' Institute, Lysander

At the recent Farmers Institute at Lysander, Bert L. Gidding of Baldwinsville, read the following paper, which will be of interest to our farmer friends. Mr. Giddings last year won the following prizes offered by the Fort Stanwix Canning Company of this city: $40 for 5 acres or more of Evergreen corn, and $50 for the first, second, third and fourth prizes for one or more acres of beets—$90 in all.

MR. GIDDING'S PAPER.

In these days of grace in which we live the art of preserving vegetables occupies a very important place in feeding the world. No doubt, many of you here today can remember the time when canned vegetables were unknown. Today millions of dollars are invested in this industry and thousands of people are employed, thus making a larger market for the farmer and gardener as well as supplying consumers with vegetables the year around.

Just why I should be selected to tell you how to grow these crops will remain a mystery to me, as I feel that I am at the A, B, C of the business. But I hope from the discussion which will follow this paper I shall be a learner.

I can only hope in the time given me to touch on the main points of this subject.

Under the head of canning crops I might speak of almost every vegetable that is cultivated, but I desire to consider only those which are adapted to our own soil and location, while no doubt others will in time be found suitable for us to grow. I will speak of four crops in order of their importance. Since in this section dairying forms one of the principal branches of farming, I will place sweet corn as one of the most important crops for canning purposes.

A sandy or gravely loam, upon which a crop of clover has been grown, is the ideal soil. I would plow in the fall if convenient or as soon as ground is settled in the spring. A harrowing, frequently enough to kill all weeds which may grow, will be of advantage. As to fertilizing, much depends on previous treatment and crops. If the spring is cold and backward, a commercial fertilizer will force a late planted crop to maturity sooner than stable manure.

Last season I used 400 pounds per acre of a fertilizer analyzing 2—10—5, which was supplemented with a light application of stable manure. On the portion of the field which received no fertilizer the yield was 25 per cent less. The varieties planted for canning purposes are Country Gentlemen and Stowell's Evergreen. The time of planting depends more on the state of the weather than any fixed date. It is well to wait until the soil is warm and moist. Sweet corn will not sprout as well in a cold soil as field corn. I planted last season about June 1st with a hoe, the hills being three feet by three feet. The plan of sowing corn with a drill on foul, quacky land and letting the corn and weeds fight it out through the season, is one not to be recommended.

If we grow the crops of our fathers, we have got to return to the use of the hoe and cultivator. If possible, I go over the crop every eight or ten days with a cultivator.

The Country Gentlemen will bear more stalks to the hill, say four or five. Three or four are about right for the Evergreen.

As to yield, the Evergreen corn averaged three tons per acre, although some parts of the field would run more. This was on ordinary land. To this add the value of the stalks and you have fair returns for labor and money invested.

Peas are a favorite crop with those who have grown them and to those who know the value of nitrogen they are especially attractive.

However, one must be located within an easy hauling distance of the factory and on this account I have had no experience with this crop. Peas will do well on naturally thin land and they leave the ground in fine condition. They are also a fine crop to seed down after. They fit well in a rotation after some hoed crop. The ground is fitted thoroughly, about as it would be for oats. In the use of fertilizer, the nitrogen can be left out and something used which will run well in phosphoric acid and potash, say about 10 and 8. This will give a better yield than the use of stable manure, which is apt to grow too much vine at the expense of the peas. Peas will stand a good deal of cold and wet weather and therefore they can be planted early.

Alaskas for early and Horsford Market for late are the varieties usually grown. The main cost of this crop is the seed, which requires about four bushels per acre and these varieties cost about $2.50 per bushel.

The seed is sown broadcast with a grain drill and it is quite important that the field should be rolled, as, if they should lodge, it would be a difficult matter to cut them with a mowing machine. The price paid is two cents per pound for the green shelled peas, which are threshed at the factory. The vines, after they are threshed, make good ensilage or they can be fed green. The yield runs anywhere from 1,000 pounds of shelled peas up to 5,000 pounds.

Beets are a comparatively new crop in this section but on good clean land in a high state of cultivation they are remunerative.

It is useless to grow them on thin land or on land which is overrun with quack grass or weeds. With the right kind of land at your command, no crop is more certain to give satisfactory returns.

As regards the soil, a rich sandy loam is to be preferred. Early plowing, followed by the harrow often enough to kill the first installment of weeds, will be found to be a good plan to follow. The varieties grown are the Detroit Red Turnip and Eclipse. For a small top and a large smooth root a commercial fertilizer will answer better than stable manure, which makes too much top growth. I have used 750 pounds per acre of a 2—8—8 fertilizer, which was put in broadcast with a grain drill before planting. The crop can be planted at intervals through the spring, suiting one's convenience. The earlier the planting the sooner they will be out of the way in the fall. The seeds are sown in rows about two feet apart with a seed drill at the rate of from 8 to 12 pounds per acre. If it should rain in three or four days after sowing, I would run over the rows with a wheel hoe and throw the dirt from the rows. Care should be taken to avoid throwing the dirt to the row as beets bottom out better and pull up easier if grown on top of the ground. After going over the rows twice with a wheel hoe, the plants will be large enough to admit running a cultivator with flat teeth between the rows. I hoed my crop last season once and went over it once, pulling out the weeds which escaped the hoe. On an average, the crop was cultivated about every ten days.

On August 1st the largest beets were two inches in diameter. Pulling commenced and continued until Nov. 1st, when they were all plowed out and shipped to the factory. The average yield per acre was seven tons, but one acre made ten tons, which was offset by two acres, which were on clover sod and made large tops but small bottoms. The tops are eagerly eaten by cows, sheep and swine.

Tomatoes are the last crop that I will speak of. A few years ago we had a season or two in which some good crops of tomatoes were raised in this section, but of late the falls have been too short for them to mature. It is important that a warm, early piece of land be selected and one which does not contain too much vegetable matter. One of the main items is early, strong plants and in order to have them one must have good hot-bed or a greenhouse, or else depend on buying the plants. This is about as uncertain as raising them. The Perfection is the variety usually recommended by the canners. The plants are set out four by four feet for field culture and the labor of caring for them is light. If you are favored with a good season, the work of harvesting will be considerable. The crop does not exhaust the soil very much and leaves the ground in good shape for the next season. Take the crop as a whole, it is somewhat unsatisfactory.

Thanking you for your attention, I will give way to those who may have had experience with these crops.

THE AMERICAN REVIEW OF REVIEWS MONTHLY

The more Magazines there are, the more Indispensable is The Review of Reviews

"Indispensable," "The one magazine I feel I must take," "The world under a field-glass," "An education in public affairs and current literature,"—these are some of the phrases one hears from noted people who read the Review of Reviews. The more magazines there are, the more necessary is the Review of Reviews, because it brings together the best that is in all the most important monthlies of the world. Such is the flood of periodical literature that nowadays people say that the only way to keep up with it is to read the Review of Reviews. Entirely over and above this reviewing section, it has more original matter and illustrations than most magazines, and the most timely and important articles printed in any monthly.

Probably the most useful section of all is Dr. Albert Shaw's illustrated "Progress of the World," where public events and issues are authoritatively and lucidly explained in every issue. Many a subscriber writes, "This department alone is worth more than the price of the magazine." The unique cartoon department, depicting current history in caricature, is another favorite. The Review of Reviews covers five continents, and yet is American, first and foremost.

Men in public life, the members of Congress, professional men, and the great captains of industry who must keep "up with the times," intelligent men and women all over America, have decided that it is "indispensable."

ELOQUENT TRIBUTE TO A GREAT MAN

Speech of Senator Chauncey M. Depew at the Ceremonies in the Senate in Memory of Senator Hoar of Massachusetts, Saturday, Jan. 28, 1905.

Mr. President—It is asserted by many writers that the Senate has seen its best days. They claim that the statesmen who made this body famous in the earlier periods of our history have not had any successors of equal merit or genius. The Senate does not change, but the questions which it must discuss and decide are new with each generation. There is a broad distinction between the elucidation and solving of problems which relate to the foundations and upbuilding of institutions, which are vital to their preservation and perpetuity, and the materialistic issues of finance, commercialism and industrialism. The one arouses in the orator every faculty of his mind, every possibility of his imagination, every aspiration of his soul and every emotion of his heart, while the others demand mainly the aptitude and experience of the college professor or the expert or student on subjects which affect the fortunes of the factory, the mill, the furnace and the farm.

Webster could command the attention of listening Senates and of an anxious and expectant country with orations which have become part of our best literature and educate the youth of our schools on interpretations of the Constitution of the United States upon which depend the life or death of liberty. But Webster could hold only temporary interest and a narrow audience on tariff schedules upon wool or lumber, upon iron or cotton fabrics or upon bimetallism or the single standard. Hamilton and Jefferson and their antagonistic schools were creating with little precedent to guide them a form of government in which liberty and law would give the largest protection to the individual citizen and maintain order and promote the greatest happiness of the mass. The one believed these results could best be obtained by centralized power, the other by its distribution among the States. There was then brought into play the loftiest creative and constructive genius which the world has known.

Webster, Clay and Calhoun, the Senatorial triumvirate who attained the zenith of Senatorial fame, made their reputations and that of this body upon the discussion of implied powers in the Constitution, affecting not only the nation's life, but the destruction or perpetuity of human slavery. Webster in that immortal speech which educated millions of our youth to rush to arms when the Republic was in danger preached from the text of "Union and liberty, one and inseparable, now and forever." Calhoun saw clearly the extinction of slavery with the growth of the country and brought to the defense of the system resources, intellectual and logical, never equaled, while Clay postponed the inevitable through compromises which were adopted because of his passionate pleas of marvelous eloquence for peace and unity. So in the acute stage of the controversy which resulted in the civil war and ended in the enfranchisement of the slaves Seward here and Lincoln on the platform were appealing to that higher law of conscience which uplifts the orator and audience to a spiritual contemplation of things material.

Happily the work of the founders in one age and the saviors in another has left to us mainly the development upon industrial lines of our country's resources and capabilities. We produced no heroes in over half a century, and yet when the war drums called the nation to arms Grant, from the tannery, and Lee, from a humble position in the Army, rose to rank among the great captains of all the ages. Had the civil war never occurred Grant would have lived a peaceful and modest mercantile life in a country town of Illinois, and Lee would have passed the evening of his days in equal obscurity upon the retired list of the United States Army. Better, if the contest can be honorably averted, that a hero should never be known than that his discovery should be brought about by the calamities of war, the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of lives and the distress, demoralization and devastation of civil strife.

We pay our tribute today to one who in any of these great periods would have stood beside the most famous, to one who, having the experience of a longer continuous term in Congress than any other citizen ever enjoyed, testified on all occasions to the increasing power, growth and beneficent influence of this body and to the ever advancing purity of American public life. His education and opportunities, his singularly intimate connection with the glorious past and the activities of the present made him a unique and in a measure an isolated figure. He was educated under conditions and in surroundings which developed for the public service conscience, heart and imagination. A lawyer of the first rank by heredity, study and practice, he nevertheless approached public questions not from the standpoint of the pleader, but the orator; not as an advocate with a brief, but as a patriot with a mission. He cast his first vote in 1847, when all the fire of his youth had been aroused by the slavery agitation. He came actively into politics the year after, when the Democratic party had divided into the Free Soil and slavery men and the Whig party was split between the adherents of conscience or cotton. He began his career upon the platform and his preparation for the public service as a conscience Whig.

He saw the preparation through the American or Know Nothing party, in which Whigs and Democrats were acting together, of an organization upon broader lines. No one worked harder or more intelligently for the fusion of men of opposite creeds on industrial questions, but of one mind in opposition to slavery, into a National Constitutional Antislavery party. When that party came into existence in 1856 with a Presidential candidate and platform it had no more ardent sponsor for its faith and its future than Senator Hoar. A party whose fundamental creed was liberty for all men of every race and color appealed to the poetic and sentimental side of our friend and to the revolutionary ideas with which he was saturated. He came to believe that the worst which the Republican party might do would be more beneficial to the country than the best which its opponent was capable of. Though often differing from his party associates, his combat was to accomplish his purposes within the lines. He bowed to the will of the majority in his action without surrendering his individual convictions as to the wisdom of the policy. He claimed, and with much reason, that the party had come after repeated trials in many instances to his way of thinking, and if those who went outside of the breastworks and lost all influence had remained with him his ideas would sooner have been adopted. We have here the explanation of the only criticism which has ever been passed upon his public acts. As in the Philippine and Panama questions, where his eloquence gave comfort to the opposition and grieved his friends, his votes supported the position of the majority and the policies of the administration.

It was a high privilege to be a member of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate under his chairmanship. It was a court presided over by a great lawyer. With courteous deference to the members, bills were sent to subcommittees, but when the subcommittee made its report they found that the questions had been exhaustively examined before by the chairman. The subcommittee which had perfunctorily done its work received in the form of a polite statement and exposition of the case the report which, if they had attended to their duties, they ought to have made. This work required not only vast legal knowledge and accurate judgment, but prodigious industry. It was that rare condition of mind where work becomes a habit, and with Senator Hoar, when the committee or the Senate or law or literature failed to give him occupation, he would pass the idle hours in translating Thucydides or some other Greek author into English.

In the examination at the close of the last session before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the President and Apostles of the Mormon Church, himself a close student of all theologies and an eminent Unitarian, he was aroused by the claim of divine inspiration for the words and acts of the Mormon Apostles. He drew from President Smith the statement that the action of his predecessor, President Woodruff, in reversing the doctrine of polygamy heretofore held by the church was directly inspired by God and then made him testify that though living under the inspiration of the presidency of the church he was also living in direct violation of that revelation by remaining a polygamist. In the course of a long cross examination he drew from Apostle Lyman statements of doctrine and beliefs and subsequently contradictions of these positions and then forced the apostle to swear that both the assertion and the contradiction were inspired by God.

At the age of forty-three he was at the crossroads of his career. He had reached a position at the bar which placed within his grasp the highest rewards of the profession of the law. The country was entering upon an era of speculation, of railroad building, bankruptcy and reorganization, of combinations of capital in the creation and consolidation of corporations, which called for the highest talents and the best equipment of lawyers. Questions as to the power of the General Government over corporations created by States and the powers of the States as to limitations and confiscations of corporations engaged in interstate commerce interested capital and labor, shippers and investors. The largest fees and fortunes ever known in the history of the practice of the law came to those who demonstrated their ability during these wonderful years. On the threshold of this temple of fortune and fame at the bar Mr. Hoar was elected to the United States Senate. He knew that he lived in a State whose traditions were to keep its public men who merited its confidence continuously in Congress. He felt that in the great questions still unsolved which had grown out of the civil war and the marvelous development of the country he could perform signal public service. His decision was made. The courts lost a great lawyer, the Senate gained a great statesman, and he lived and died a poor man.

I spent a memorable night with Mr. Gladstone when in a reminiscent mood, and with a masterful discrimination and eloquence he conversed upon the traditions of the House of Commons during the sixty years of his membership. As the stately procession of historic men and measures came into view they were inspired by the speaker with all the characteristics and methods of their period. The changes which had occurred were detailed by a master who loved and revered the Commons. Senator Hoar would do this for the thirty-seven years of his activities in Congress, but with a wit and humor which Gladstone lacked. He remembered the sarcasm or the ridicule or the epigram or the witticism or the illustration which had not only illumed but ended the debate and the opposing debater.

We read with wonder of the nights when Samuel Johnson gathered about him Goldsmith and Burke and Reynolds and Garrick, and Boswell could make immortal volumes of their conversations, especially at this time when conversation is becoming a lost art, because the shop has invaded the drawing room and the dinner table and cards have captured society.

But Senator Hoar knew his favorites [illegible] the Greek and Roman classics [illegible] the Bible and Shakespeare by [illegible]t. He could quote with a familiarity of frequent reading and retentive memory from the literature of the period of Queen Elizabeth and of Queen Anne, as well as the best of modern authors, and he was a member of that coterie which met weekly at Parker's in Boston, where Longfellow, Hawthorne, Whittier and others reproduced for our day and in better form the traditions of the Johnsonian Parliament and where the Senator and his brother were the quickest and the wittiest of the crowd.

Whether in conversation or debate there never has been in the American Congress a man so richly cultured and with all his culture so completely at command.

The statesmen of the Revolution were with Senator Hoar living realities. The men of the present were passing figures, fading into obscurity, compared with these immortals. In a remarkable speech he said of the signers of the Declaration, "We, not they, are the shadows." On his father's side, his grandfather, two great grandfathers and three uncles were in Lincoln's company at Concord Bridge, and his mother was a daughter of Roger Sherman, whom he thought the wisest and ablest of the members of the Continental Congress. He was the only person who signed all four of the great state papapers to which the signatures of the Delegates of the different Colonies were attached—the association of 1774, the Articles of Confederation, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

His mother remembered as a little girl sitting on Washington's knee and hearing him talk, and her sister, the mother of William M. Evarts, when a child of eleven, opened the door for General Washington as he was leaving the house after his visit to her father, Roger Sherman. The General, with his stately courtesy, "put his hand on her head and said, 'My little lady, I wish you a better office.' She dropped a courtesy and answered quick as lightning, 'Yes, sir; to let you in.'" He lived all his life in this atmosphere of his youth. The marvelous results of the working of the principles of the charter framed in the cabin of the Mayflower for "just and equal laws" and of the Declaration of Independence in the development of orderly liberty for his countrymen convinced him that the same rights and privileges would end as happily, after trial, with the negroes of the South and the people of the Philippine Islands and of the Russian Empire. It was a matter with him not of pride or boastfulness, but of sustaining power under responsibilities that in every Congress from the beginning had been a representative of the Sherman clan. I was distantly related to him by the same tie, and he exhibited an elder brotherly and almost fatherly watchfulness and care for me when I entered the Senate.

His cousin, William M. Evarts, and Roger Minot Sherman were the foremost advocates of their periods, his father eminent at the bar and his brother Attorney General of the United States, and yet he would have been the equal of either as a lawyer if he had climbed for its leadership. It has been the high privilege of his colleagues here to meet, converse, work and debate with a Mayflower Puritan possessed of all the culture and learning of the twentieth century, but with the virtues, the prejudices, the likes and dislikes, the vigor and courage of the Pilgrim Fathers, neither softened nor weakened by the looseness of creeds nor the luxury of living of today. In 1850 he delivered a speech in Mechanics' Hall at Worcester upon the evils of slavery and the crime of its extension into the Territories which attracted general attention and was widely published. Fifty-four years afterward he was again before an audience in Mechanics' Hall composed of the children and grandchildren of the first.

The dread summons had then come to him, and he had but few days to live. The old warrior spoke with the fire of his early manhood, but his message to his neighbors and countrymen after a half century was not of war, as before, but of peace, love and triumph. The progress and development of the Republic during these fifty years of liberty was his theme. He looked joyously upon the past and present and was full of hope and confidence for the future. He had finished his work and performed a great part in great events of great moment for his country and humanity, and he left to his contemporaries and posterity the brilliant example of a life nobly lived.

Superfluous Information.

"It's quite a heavy shower we're having," he said cheerily to the man who had entered the hotel lobby with his clothes soaked and his umbrella dripping.

"Yes, sir," replied the stranger testily, "it is a heavy shower, but you have failed to remark also the interesting facts that the shower is falling downward from above, that it's a wet shower and that it is raining on both sides of the street. Also you have neglected to observe that the earth is round and that there are four seasons each year. But I'm obliged to you for you information about the weather."

And the stranger walked away with a glitter of vindictive triumph in his eye.

The Social Capital.

We do not think that either Washington or New York or any other city will ever become the social capital of the United States as London is the social capital of Great Britain. Washington will come much nearer to it than it does at present, but the country is too big to have a social capital. Hordes of people will come to New York to make money, to amuse themselves, to study, to live their lives in the least restricted atmosphere that the country offers, but only very rich people will come here to find and occupy a place in organized society. Pleasant people will always find pleasant playmates here. There is no lack of good company for everybody that is companionable. But the charm of New York for people who still live elsewhere is not in its society, but in its shops and shows, its sunshine, its eating and its drinking. It is pleasant. It grows finer every day. When it is finished it will be a marvelous city, but hardly the social capital of the country.—Harper's Weekly.

A Finny Acrobat.

No two leaps of the tarpon are quite alike. As the tarpon comes out into day his jaws distend, his gills flap open, and the mullet bait flies out across the water for a hundred feet, while he retches at the hook, shaking his head angrily from side to side, like a horse that fights his bit. In midflight he will turn and cut into the stream with a head on dive that makes a perfect cleavage of the whitened water. His next emergence may be a back somersault and his third a long distance jump with no height to it, but a substantial gain in feet. With infinite spirit he will continue his play until absolutely worn out, when the spring and somersaulting lapse into a long, rolling stroke from side to side, showing the two foot dorsal filament, which waves and floats out behind, like some independent water creature.—Country Life In America.

Lefevre's Wall Street Mystery.

Edwin Lefevre has just began a tantalizing mystery serial in the February McClure's. Scene, the realm of high finance—a field particularly interesting just now, and one that Mr. Lefevre knows accurately, as evidenced by his penetrating "Wall Street Stories."

"The Golden Flood" this serial is called. It shows the president of the greatest New York bank, and the richest man in the world, who get worked up to a lather of apprehension by a very quiet young man. His unusual operations with Assay office gold checks cause the excitement. The president and the richest man don't know what he's up to—and neither does the reader.

Keen knowledge of the intimate psychology of Wall Street leaders makes this story unusually taking—and its such an astonishing puzzle!

"I know what it is to be afflicted with backache and I sympathize with fellow sufferers. After swallowing various and frequent nauseating doses of this and that prescription I decided that if Dr. Fenner's Kidney and Backache Cure could not rid me of those backaches it at least would not do me any harm and I procured a bottle.

N. B.—ANDREW CARNEGIE says: "I think THE WORLD'S WORK remarkable."

An Honored Woman Who Thinks.

Miss Florence Nightingale, the pioneer of army nurses, is still living at Hyde Park, London, and lately received many congratulations on the fiftieth anniversary of her sailing for the Crimea. Miss Nightingale has all her life been a believer in equal rights for women. She once wrote: "You ask my reasons for believing in woman's suffrage. It seems to me almost self evident, an axiom, that every taxpayer should have a vote on the expenditure of the money we pay, including, as this does, interests the most vital to a human being."

His Humor Lost.

"This payroll is too big," exclaimed the manager of the "Hamlet" company. "Can't we get along with less people?"

"You might give up the ghost," suggested one of the gravediggers.

And the manager, wrongly thinking the suggestion referred to himself, discharged the humorist instanter.

Why, Indeed?

"Why, oh, why," remarked the observer of events and things, "will a woman smile with delight when she sees a hat in a milliner's window and frown when she sees the same hat on her neighbor's head?"

The Dead Line.

Outer—It's a dreadful responsibility to bring up a boy in the way he should go. Flouter—Dead easy. Just take good care he doesn't go the same way you go.—New York Times.

Dead counselors are the most instructive because they are heard with patience and reverence.—Johnson.

Full of Business to the End.

Commercial Traveler (wrecked on a desert island to cannibals)—Well, since you're determined to eat me kindly do me one last favor. Use our brand of mustard for the sauce. It improves the flavor of all meat. It never molds or absorbs moisture. You'll find a sample box in my right hand coat pocket.

Why Great Novel Writers Are Scarce.

The number of great novel writers is small. A deep experience of the world and human beings is given to few, because few can bear the suffering which is its price, and fewer still have the moral courage to tell the truth.—John Oliver Hobbes.

Her Reserve.

"I trust, Miss Tappit," said the kindly employer to his stenographer, "that you have something in reserve for a rainy day."

"Yes, sir," answered the young woman; "I am going to marry a man named Mackintosh."

Sunday Mornings.

A man thinks he is tired and must stay abed Sunday morning to rest up when it is only because everything else you can do that day is a terrible bore.—New York Press.

Friendship between women is frequently only a suspension of hostilities.—Gray.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 1, 1905.

RUSSIA evidently needs Pastor Wagner to tell it something about the simple life.

THE Beef Trust has advanced the price of meat. The expenses of advertising that there is no beef trust probably made the advance necessary.

OUR SIX special agents, commercial experts, who are to be attached to our foreign embassies will have prescribed districts to look after. One will familiarize himself with Austria, the Balkan States, Germany, Switzerland, Russia "and other countries of North Europe." The others have similar bailiwicks. Evidently there will be no time for sleeping on beat.

MR. BRYAN and Mr. Roosevelt have met upon the peaceful field of the White House offices and exchanged compliments, which for wit or brilliancy could not have been excelled by any modern hero of romance, but which were clearly indicative of mutual respect. It is something of an intellectual triumph when a man of Bryan's avowed principles of four years back can gracefully and apparently with sincerity congratulate the President on some of his accomplishments, and it is not less a demonstration of Roosevelt's breadth of spirit and liberality that he received Mr. Bryan with such cordiality. Bryan certainly in the last few years has shown a broadening of vision and pronouncement the may or may not have been due to that enlightening experience of a trip abroad. Senator Cullom upon meeting Mr. Bryan spoke of that gentlemen's increased avoirdupois, saying aptly, "You have grown in more ways than one, Mr. Bryan." Doubtful as that compliment may have been to the one addressed it had the merit of truth and it is a phenomenon that a man of President Roosevelt's character would be quick to recognize.

RICHARDSON THEATRE.

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs" in Oswego.

In "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," Mr. Belasco will take us back to the times, which were, on the whole, far less serious than our own, so different indeed that it requires a good stretch of the imagination to convince us that in one short century the manners, customs, and even the hearts of men could so entirely change. Yet good fellowship was cherished and prized, and loyal hearts were pledged in cups deep and frequent. Indeed, heavy drinking was held indispensible accompaniment to true friendship, and to refuse a toast was an unpardonable offense. The art of love-making, too, was a far more delicate affair than seems known to this active and prosaic century. It was a pastime for the "quality," a game of chance, a throw of the dice, a reckless and impetuous plunge in which the woer was a veritable gambler with his lady love's heart as the stake.

It is this atmosphere which David Belasco has been absorbing during the dramatic creation of "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" and if he has restored to the stage even one true suggestion of those picturesque days, he will again have enriched the true literature of the drama.

In the title role of "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," Miss Crosman finds her best opportunity. At Richardson Theatre, Oswego, Thursday evening, Feb. 2. Seats now on sale at Watson's drug store. Special train on the O. & W. leaves Fulton at 7:15 p. m.; fare, 50 cents round trip. Secure railroad tickets at Watson's.

STEPHENS OPERA HOUSE.

Swan, will be the play presented, and a first class production is guaranteed. Popular prices will prevail 10, 20 and 30 cents.

Slight Fires.

An alarm of fire was sent from box 57 last Thursday afternoon, which was quickly responded to by the department. The bursting of a steam pipe, connected with a hot-water tank at the residence of Mr. Harvey McMurchy on Broadway, gave the occupants the impression that a serious fire had broken out in the kitchen, which was fortunately not true. A plumber repaired the damage.

As soon as the apparatus returned to the engine house an alarm was sounded from box 38. In an effort to thaw out a frozen pipe in Patrick Lynch's house in Seneca street, the woodwork caught fire, but it was soon extinguished, damage slight.

Her Laudable Desire.

"Oh, dear, no!" replied the heiress. "Only because I want to see that old castle of yours repaired before it goes to utter ruin."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Led All the Guests.

In the days of King George III. of England the Persian ambassador to his court demanded, but was denied, precedence over all other foreign representatives. He refused to go to court, causing it to be reported abroad that he was ill. He met the prince regent at the house of the Lady Salisbury of the time. "I am very sorry to offend your royal highness by not going to court," he said. "Now, sir, my sovereign, he tell me I go first; your people say I must go last. Now, this very bad for me when I go back to Persia." So saying, he made a significant pass toward his head, expressing decapitation. The prince tried to appease him. "But, sir, you still angry with me. You have not invited me to your party tomorrow night." The prince explained that it was only a children's party, but the ambassador might come if he chose. He did choose, for he went and, being the only ambassador there, led all the guests, thus scoring heavily for Persia, which made him comfortable about the neck again.

Restoring Faded Ink.

Faded ink on old documents, papers, parchments, etc., may be restored so as to render the writing perfectly legible. The process consists in moistening the paper with water and then passing over the lines a brush which has been wetted with a solution of sulphide of ammonia. The writing will immediately appear quite dark in color, and this color in the case of parchment will be preserved. On paper, however, the color will gradually fade again, but on a fresh application of the sulphide of ammonia it will reappear. Writing executed in ordinary ink which has been rendered illegible by age may be restored by carefully moistening it with an infusion of galls or a solution of ferrocyanide of potassium slightly acidulated with hydrochloric acid. Care must be taken to apply the liquid so as to prevent the ink from spreading.

Sandy's Initiation.

A Scottish gillie was invited by the laird to take a pull at his flask after gaffing the first fish of the day.

"I canna trink oot a bottle," protested the gillie, with a frown of disapproval.

"Aweel, try, Sandy," said the laird encouragingly. And Sandy tried—tried so thoroughly that the laird gazed in mingled awe and admiration as the whisky gurgled and gurgled out of the flesk down the swarthy throat until, with scarce a heel tap left in it, the "pocket pistol" was handed back to the owner.

"Hoot, Sandy, maybe ye were richt; maybe ye canna trink oot of a bottle," gasped the laird, with a mighty sigh. "but, eh, mon, ye'd soon learn!"—Bally's Magazine.

Benefits of Proper Breathing.

The habit of slow, measured, deep breathing that covers the entire lung surface is of more value and importance than you will ever believe until you have tried it, and when you have established the habit of breathing in this manner you will say some remarkable things in its favor. It will reach all points of your physical system. All the benefits that occur from a healthy condition of the blood will in a greater or less degree be yours, for the manner and completeness with which the inspired air comes in contact with the blood in the lungs are of the utmost importance to every vital process.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

Hissing In the Theater.

Formerly there was no hissing in the theater. The benevolent audience were content to yawn and fall asleep. The invention of hissing is no older than 1680 and took place at the first representation of "Aspar," a tragedy of Fontenelle, so we are told by the poet Roi in his "Brevet de la Calotte." A farce was produced in Bannister's time under the title of "Fire and Water." "I predict its fate," said Bannister. "What fate?" whispered the anxious author at his side. "What fate?" said Bannister. "Why, what can fire and water produce but a hiss?"

In Light Distress.

A new term was heard the other day. An old lady and her two daughters came into a millinery store. The young women wore mourning hats. The old woman said to the clerk: "I want a mourning hat, for I am in mourning. But my datter here," indicating, "is a widder of two years' standing, and she is in light distress. Give her a hat with blue feathers on it."—Chicago News.

Muscles in Tension.

The Revue Scientifique has been asking what muscles tire soonest, with the conclusion that it is not the muscles in use, but those under tension, although doing no work. The writer urges us to use the arms and legs less and the back and neck more, for on them comes the greatest strain. He has been asking men of all occupations the same questions:

When you have worked much, where do you feel tired?

Before you were trained did fatigue show itself in the same regions?

All the answers point to the same conclusions. The baker who kneads dough all night complains of fatigue in his legs.

The blacksmith is tired, not in his arms and shoulders, but in his back and loins.

The young soldier, after a march, is especially tired in the back of the neck, even if he has carried no knapsack.

The oarsman who is in perfect training after prolonged exercise gets tired in his calves and insteps.

These facts point to the conclusion that in any continued effort we should try to alter the habit of contraction. That is to say, the body, like the mind, needs change of work.

A Nightmareless Rarebit.

A bachelor whose skill at getting up dainty supper dishes assures him plenty of company in the evenings is responsible for a substitute for the Welsh rabbit that is free from nightmare. He covers lightly toasted bread with finely grated cheese and instead of slipping it in the oven places it beneath the flame of the gas broiler until the cheese has been toasted a light brown.

If a good cream cheese is used there is not the slightest suggestion of sogginess or greasiness, and even those to whom a rabbit means a night of troubled dreams may indulge in this with no fear of evil consequences.

The trick lies in the grating of the cheese. Broken into bits, it would melt into a pasty mass. Finely divided, each particle should be individually toasted before it has a chance to melt down, and in that state it is readily assimilated.—New York Press.

The Choice of a Wife.

A German professor selects a woman who can merely stew prunes not because stewing prunes and reading Proclus make a delightful harmony, but because he wants his prunes stewed for him and chooses to read Proclus by himself. A fullness of sympathy, a sharing of life one with another, is scarcely ever looked for except in a narrow, conventional sense. Men like to come home and find a blazing fire and a smiling face and an hour of relaxation. Their serious thoughts and earnest aims in life they keep on one side. And this is the carrying out of love and marriage almost everywhere in the world, and this the degrading of women by both.—From One of Mrs. Browning's Letters, 1846.

The Value of New Ideas.

The recognition of the value of a new idea in regard to a business point is leading employers to encourage criticisms and suggestions from employees in respect to the details of the business, thus utilizing their microscopic view rather than depending solely on the birdseye view which is taken by the manager. A friendly feeling results from this attitude, and the employee takes a deeper interest in his work, developing his own capacity and helping the business. To see his idea carried out by his superiors puts new life into him and adds new enthusiasm to his efforts.—Success.

The Wedding Ring Finger.

The wedding ring was placed on the left hand as nearest the heart and on the fourth finger because that finger was supposed to have its own "private wire" (in the shape of a delicate nerve) to the heart. That finger, too, was called the medicine finger, and the belief was that by virtue of the little nerve it could detect a dangerous poison if simply inserted in the liquid. From that belief the idea that wedding rings—the rings worn on that finger—had special curative qualities had its rise. To this day wedding rings are rubbed over an obstinate sty on an eyelid.

The Chance He Lost.

"Why are you so sad, Alice?" her mother asked.

"I've decided not to keep company with Mr. Jonesby any more."

"Dear me! Have you heard anything about him?"

"No. But last night when I said I wished that I was a man he merely asked me why, instead of getting excited and saying that life would be hateful to him if I had not been born a girl."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Cynical.

"Which do you think counts for the most in life, money or brains?"

"Well," answered Miss Cayenne, "I see so many people who manage to get on with so little of either that I am beginning to lose my respect for both."—Washington Star.

His Compliment.

Fond Young Mother (with firstborn)—Now, which of us do you think he is like? Friend (judicially)—Well, of course, intelligence has not really dawned in his countenance yet, but he's wonderfully like both of you.—Punch.

The Best Kind of Charity.

The best kind of charity is not that which makes a man easy in destitution, but uneasy in it—uneasy enough to struggle out of it by the aid of a friendly hand.—Zion's Herald.

If a man's fortune does not fit him, it is like the shoe in the story—if too large, it trips him up; if too small, it pinches him.—Horace.

One Advantage of England's Fogs.

"Should scientists succeed in finding ways and means for dispelling the foggy condition of England's atmosphere I am afraid that country will lose more than it gains," said a weaver. "One of the reasons why English weavers produce fabrics of finer and softer finish than American weavers from the same quality of cotton and other yarn is because of the damp condition of the atmosphere in that country at all times.

"It is a well known fact that yarn kept continually and uniformly damp will spin finer and softer than that drying out in the process of weaving. Thousands of dollars have been spent by our weavers in appliances to keep their shops uniformly humid, but thus far without success. The fine quality of panama hats, for instance, if the straw were not kept damp while the process of weaving is on, could not be produced. The straw is not worked under water, as many suppose, but is kept uniformly damp by being worked in the early morning hours when a heavy dew is falling."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

He Wanted That Wine.

General Sir E. Hamley is cited as the authority for a good anecdote about Bismarck. Hamley was sitting close to the chancellor at luncheon, with the old Emperor William not far off.

Bismarck, talking rather loudly, described the old monarch as being generous, but very forgetful. Hamley got nervous, as he thought the emperor would hear. "For instance," continued Bismarck, "I pleased him the other day, and he asked me what he could do for me. I said, 'Give me a dozen of that Tokay you have in your cellars,' and he said he would. "But," added Bismarck, raising his voice still higher, "he hasn't done it." Here Hamley hastily broke in. "I beg your pardon, but I am really afraid the emperor will hear you." "I want him to hear me!" roared Bismarck. "That's just what I want." And a smile broke over the face of his imperial master.—"Fifty Years of Fleet Street."

Tiger Story From India.

A man living in a village near Lucknow is reported to have had an extraordinary adventure in the jungle. He had gone in search of two buffaloes that had gone astray when he was attacked by a tiger.

He was unarmed except for a heavy stick, with which he fought until overcome by loss of blood, when he sank unconscious. At this moment the two buffaloes appeared. One of them stood over the wounded man, while the other snorted and tossed his head.

The man recovered consciousness and staggered to his feet, when the tiger made another spring at him. The beast was, however, received on the horns of one of the buffaloes and was so badly wounded that it turned tail and slunk away.—London Express.

Liquid Metal Polish.

Take eight ounces of Spanish whiting, which must be perfectly free from grit, and put in one quart of gasoline. Shake up the whiting and gasoline thoroughly. You will notice the whiting settles immediately, leaving the liquid as clear as water. To remedy this and, further, to make it a better polishing agent, add to each quart of the mixture thirty-two drops of oleic acid—no more, no less. Shake again, and the whiting will not settle. Apply to gold, silver, nickel, brass, glass or any kind of metallic surface with a piece of cotton flannel, rubbing well. Polish with a piece of same cloth.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

Waterproofing Dress Goods.

One of the most important processes used for waterproofing dress materials is on the lines of the old alumina process. In this case the factor used is rosin dissolved in a large bulk of petroleum spirit. The fabrics to be proofed are passed through a bath of this solution and dried to drive off the solvent. Following this, the goods are treated by pressing with hot polished metal rollers. This last process melts the small quantity of rosin which is deposited on the cloth and leaves each single fiber with an exceedingly thin film of rosin on it.

Forests and National Prosperity.

As a living example of the consequences of deforestation we need simply look to Spain, a country which centuries ago was rich in timber and agricultural products, a proud seafaring nation of world conquerors. Spain's decadence dates from the time when her timber supply became exhausted, her shipbuilding relaxed and her barren, unprotected soil ceased to bear fruit.—Forum.

A Long Way Around.

A man with a large family of daughters on his hands may profit by the following suggestion: An old lady who had several unmarried daughters fed them largely on a fish diet because, as she ingeniously observed, "fish is rich in phosphorus, and phosphorus is useful in making matches."

Her First Dinner.

"Yes," said Newlywed, "my wife and I are housekeeping now. She prepared our first dinner last night with her own fair hands."

"How was it?" asked Bacheller.

"Well, the nuts and raisins were fine."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Most Deadly of Insults.

Fweddie—That creature actually told me to mind my own business, y'know! Cholly — The impertinent wretch! Fweddie—Positively insulting! As if to insinuate, don't y'know, that I was in business!—Cleveland Leader.

Nobody can help being born stupid, but anybody can help becoming stupider than he was born.—Lady Helen Forbes.

ONE AGAINST MANY.

One Alleged Woman Corruptionist Found to Many Male Vote Buyers.

It is going the rounds of the newspapers that one Mrs. Rosa Snyder of Denver has been arrested for buying votes. This will doubtless cause great rejoicing among the antisuffragists and be quoted as proof of the corruption that the possession of the ballot will work in the nature of woman.

Before subscribing to such a rash conclusion let us recall a few facts. It has been estimated that there are 500,000 foreigners in this country who possess fraudulent naturalization papers. The officers of the immigration bureau intimate that 100,000 were issued last year. An attorney for the federal government declares that there are 30,000 in New York city alone. While this vast swindle means an immense number of corrupt men who are responsible for it, it is only one part of the enormous amount of fraud attending our elections. The whole field of vote buying remains untouched.

The newspapers would not think it worthy of special mention that one man was arrested for buying votes, because everybody knows that thousands of men bought votes, and it cannot be considered as anything short of a tribute to the sex that while women in four states had an equal chance with men only one woman fell by the wayside.

Surely the ballot in the hands of women has proved a blessing far beyond expectation, and the newspapers in calling attention to the shortcomings of Mrs. Rosa Snyder are paying women a great compliment in bringing to public notice how high must be the standard when one delinquent receives so much publicity.

A Quaint Story.

The Irish solicitor general, speaking the other day upon delusions, told a story of a north of Ireland Protestant who was perfectly sane save on one point. This staunch Protestant harbored the delusion that one of his legs belonged to a Roman Catholic, and therefore when he went to bed every night he used to leave the Catholic leg outside the blanket by way of punishment.

Slavery in America.

"One of the common, everyday errors which are taught in the schools in America is that which relates to the introduction into the western hemisphere of African slavery," writes a critic. "The school histories which the schoolgirl and schoolboy study say that it dates from 1619 or 1620, when a Dutch sea captain sold the English settlers the first African. The year 1501, however, is the date of the earliest reference in American history to negroes coming from Spain to America, 122 years before Albany, N. Y., was settled by the Dutch and 106 years before Jamestown, Va., was settled by the English. In 1505 King Ferdinand of Spain wrote to Orando, then governor of Hispaniola, 'I will send more negro slaves, as you request.' In 1510 fifty negro slaves were sent to work in the mines of Hispaniola. There is a record of King Ferdinand's response to a request of Las Casas, bishop of La Concepcion, in Hispaniola, that more negroes should be imported. He said, 'There are already many negroes on the island.' This was in the year 1514."

Milk and Apples.

Though no one would think so from looking at a fluid glass of milk and a solid apple, the percentage of solids and water in apples and in milk is almost the same, apples being 85 per cent water, and milk 86 per cent.

There is more sugar in apples and more acid in milk. A diet of both apples and milk is one of the most wholesome and well balanced. The potash contents of both are high. They are the best for brain, bone and muscle nourishment, and in their effect upon the nerves they are soothing.

In skimming milk the cream removed lessens the fat percentage, and for older people or fat children the skim milk is equally desirable, in some cases better. In eating apples the skin, too, should be eaten. Pared apples are not so nutritious, as the ash contents of the apple skin are valuable to the human system.

Odd Animal Laws.

When a dog was unlawfully killed in countries differing so widely as Germany and Arabia the owner of the animal used to be indemnified in the following manner: The dog was hung up by the tail, with the point of its muzzle touching the ground, and the man who had committed the offense was obliged to pour over it corn or flour until the carcass was completely hidden by the heap. This heap then became the property of the man who owned the dog.

In Syria there was a specially curious variation, for if it were a street dog that was killed the flour was made into bread and given to its fellows. No doubt this arose from the value attached in those old parts to street dogs as scavengers. By the old Welsh laws of Howel the damages for killing an animal belonging to another were assessed in the same odd manner.

Nasal CATARRH

In all its stages.

Ely's Cream Balm

cleanses, soothes and heals the diseased membrane. It cures catarrh and drives away a cold in the head quickly.

ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren Street, New York

Marketing In Paris.

Almost every woman in France does her own marketing, and ladies take their maid or cook along to carry home their purchases.

I am speaking of the average household. Rich or very chic people leave the marketing to the cook, who deals in stores which have regular deliveries, while in very wealthy households that all important personage, the chef, would not hear of any one interfering with his prerogative of selecting and ordering everything, and this able creator of sauces, of things savory, steaming or jellied, may even have his own coupe to take him to the Halles, the huge market that each day provides the provisions for all of Paris and its suburbs.

Servants love to go to market, for it is a custom with almost every storekeeper to give them a cent on every franc spent, so you will find it next to an impossibility to make your cook deal where she does not receive her sou du franc, and in engaging a servant many will ask you, "Does madame do her own marketing?"—Good Housekeeping.

Nasal Catarrh quickly yields to treatment by Ely's Cream Balm, which is agreeably aromatic. It is received through the nostrils, cleanses and heals the whole surface over which it diffuses itself. A remedy for Nasal Catarrh which is drying or exciting to the diseased membrane should not be used. Cream Balm is recognized as a specific. Price 50 cents at druggists or by mail. A cold in the head immediatly disappears when Cream Balm is used. Ely Brothers, 56 Warren, New York.

We need the participation of woman in the ballot box. It is idle to fear that she will meet with disrespect or insult at the polls. Let her walk up firmly and modestly to deposit her vote, and if any one ventures to molest her the crowd will swallow him up as the whale swallowed Jonah.—Henry Ward Beecher.

The Best Physic.

Humors of the Law.

Law and equity are two things which God has joined together and man has put asunder.

When a prisoner in Justice Maule's court was asked whether he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced upon him, he replied, "I wish God may strike me dead if I stole the ducks." Maule waited for about a minute and then said: "Prisoner, as Providence has not interfered I must. Three months' hard labor."

A mayor on taking his seat on the bench for the first time informed the bar that during his year of office he would spare no effort to be neither partial nor impartial.—Address of Sir Albert Rollit in London.

The Pine Woods.

The pine stands in the woods like an Indian, untamed, with a fantistic wildness about it even in the clearings. If an Indian warrior were well painted, with pines in the background, he would seem to blend with the trees and make a harmonious expression. The pitch pines are the ghosts of Philip and Massasoit. The white pine has the smoother features of the squaw.

The distant woods are but the tassels of my eye.

Books are to be attended to as new sounds merely. Most would be put to a sore trial if the reader should assume the attitude of a listener. They are but a new note in the forest. To our lonely, sober thought the earth is a wild unexplored. Wildness as of the jay and muskrat reigns over the great part of nature. The ovenbird and plover are heard in the horizon. Here is a new book of heroes come to me like the note of the chewink from over the fen, only over a deeper and wider fen. The pines are unrelenting sifters of thought; nothing petty leaks through them. Let me put my ear close and hear the sough of this book, that I may know if any inspiration yet haunts it. There is always a later edition of every book than the printer wots of, no matter how recently it was published. All nature is a new impression every instant. —H. D. Thoreau in Atlantic.

The Pie Libel.

A piece of pie is not necessarily a death warrant. It depends on what it is made of and how it is made. Pie proper should represent an unobjectionable combination of fruit and bread.

The word "pastry," however, covers a multitude of dietetic sins. Flour and fat rolled into a couple of soggy layers, between which spiced meats, chopped with more fat, mingled with raisins and other fruits and moistened with cognacs—this may be pastry, but it is a libel on pie.

A crust made reasonably tender with sweet cream, olive oil or fresh butter or with half butter and half beef suet (the soft variety), with sufficient baking powder or cream of tartar and soda to make it light and porous, filled with wholesome fruit or berries—this is pie, and it is quite as digestible and harmless as the ordinary baker's loaf.

It is about time the pie libel was relegated to the limbo of other lies.—Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette.

Divorce In Turkey.

A woman in the sultan's realm when divorced from her husband is not treated with contumely and often marries again. A husband simply says to his wife, "I have divorced you." She leaves him, and he tells the same to the cadi, who gives to him a paper of written divorcement. If it is the first or second time that this has occurred he may take her back again without any formality ensuing, but after a third divorce she will be lost to him forever. Men abuse this license and sometimes divorce their wives for a very small fault, like a bad dinner or a button unsewed, each knowing that if he repents he can have his wife back before evening. It is not uncommon that a wife is divorced from five husbands and lives with a sixth.

Cookery and Government.

Rossini, the Italian composer, is reported to have said a droll thing on the unification of Italy when some one asked his opinion on this matter. He replied that he thought it very difficult if not impossible to effect it for the simple reason that the Neapolitans eat nothing but macaroni, the Florentines nothing but fagiuoli and the Lombards only polenta, while the Piedmontese swallow all they can get. "It it clear," he said, "that uniformity of cookery must precede unity of government."

Marriage.

Marriage is not the church, the ritual, the blessing of clergymen or the ratifying and approving presence of one's friends and relations at the ceremony. Still less is it a matter of settlements and expensive millinery. It is the taking of a solemn vow before the throne of the eternal. Nothing can make marriage an absolutely sacred thing except the great love, combined with the pure and faithful intention of fulfilling the vow involved.—Marie Corelli.

A Double Request.

"Are you the 'answers to correspondents' man?" inquired the dyspeptic looking caller.

"I am," replied the gentleman addressed. "What can I do for you?"

"Firstly, what will dissolve a chunk of lead in the human stomach? Secondly, won't you please refrain from publishing recipes for plum pudding hereafter?"—Philadelphia Press.

Lucky Boy.

Farmer Foddershucks was angry with his scapegrace of a son. "Young man," he thundered, "ye're a disgrace to this here fambly! It's a mighty good thing fer you thet I hain't rich."

"Why, dad?" asked his son sheepishly.

"Becus if I was I'd disinherit ye—that's why!"—Cleveland Leader.

Reason For Worry.

Balty Moore—Oh, pshaw, old man, I wouldn't worry about Blowhard's opinion of me if I were you! Calvert, Jr.—It isn't his opinion I'm worrying about. It's the grounds I happen to know he has for that opinion.—Baltimore American.

Thoughts Supplied.

"Now," said the inquisitive bachelor, "I want to ask you a question. Do you think in the married state"—

"No," replied Henpeck promptly. "I ain't allowed to."—Exchange.

What a Hand May Mean.

In all my experiences and thoughts I am conscious of a hand. Whatever touches me, whatever thrills me, is as a hand that touches me in the dark, and that touch is my reality. You might as well say that a sight which makes you glad or a blow which brings the stinging tears to your eyes is unreal as to say that those impressions are unreal which I have accumulated by means of touch. The delicate tremble of a butterfly's wings in my hand, the soft petals of violets curling in the cool folds of their leaves or lifting sweetly out of the meadow grass, the clear, firm outline of face and limb, the smooth arch of a horse's neck and the velvety touch of his nose—all these and a thousand resultant combinations, which take shape in my mind, constitute my world.—Helen Keller in Century.

Saved the Carriage.

In his "Reminiscences of an Irish Land Agent" the author, Sam Hussey, tells of one of the earliest private carriages used in Kerry: "The vehicle in question had just been purchased by a certain Miss Mullins, who regarded it on its arrival with almost sacred awe. A dance in the neighborhood seemed an appropriate opportunity for impressing the county with her newly acquired grandeur; but, the night proving wet, she insisted on reverting to a former mode of progression and rode pillion behind her coachman. The result was that she caught a violent chill, which turned to pneumonia. When her relatives were assembled round her deathbed the old lady exclaimed between her last gasps for breath, 'Thank goodness I never took out the carriage that wet night!'"

Afraid of Strong Medicines.

Many people suffer for years from rheumatic pains, and prefer to do so rather than take the strong medicines usually given for rheumatism, not knowing that quick relief from pain may be had simply by applying Chamberlain's Pain Balm and without taking any medicine internally. Rev. Amos Parker of Magnolia, North Carolina, suffered for eight years with a lame hip, due to severe rheumatic pains. He has been permanently cured by the free application of Chamberlains pain Balm for sale by H. C. Giesler.

Magnet Power.

The lifting of massive iron and steel plates weighing four, six and twelve tons by magnetism is now done every workday in a number of large steel works. The magnets are suspended by chains from cranes and pick up the plates by simple contact and without the loss of time consequent to the adjustment of chain and hooks in the older method. It is also found that the metal plates can be lifted by the magnets while still so hot that it would be impossible for the men to handle them. A magnet weighing 300 pounds will lift nearly five tons.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy the Mother's Favorite.

The soothing and healing properties of this remedy, its pleasant taste and prompt and permanent cures have made it a favorite with people everywhere. It is especially prized by mothers of small children, for colds, croup and whooping cough, as it always affords quick relief, and as it contains no opium or other harmful drug, it may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. The Oldest Church.

The oldest Christian church in the world is at Rome. Not far from the great Church of St. Maria Maggiore, in a street bearing the same name, is the much smaller Church of St. Puentiana, which tradition as well as the opinion of archaeological experts declares to be the most ancient of the Christian edifices of Rome.

About the middle of the first century a certain Roman senator named Pudens had a house on this spot. He was a Christian convert and, it is said, a distant relative of Paul, the apostle, who lodged with him from A. D. 41 to 50 and converted his two daughters, Praxedes and Pudentiana. For the religious uses of himself and guests he built a small chapel in this house, and when he died in 96 and his wife a year later his daughter added a baptistery, the plans for which were drawn by Pius, the then bishop of Rome. In course of time a church was erected on the site of the original house of Pudens and consecrated by the bishop in 108 or 145.

The Rented Babies of Paris.

The written law provides for every child in France that the government supplement the home education and when necessary replace it entirely, but as a matter of fact there are scores of children, in Paris especially, who have shaken free of their parents or been cast off by them and who live a vagabond existence, playing hide and seek with the officers of the law. Among this band the commonest offense is begging, though generally there is some older person back of the whining specimens one meets with on the streets. The fruitful incomes in this profession are obtained only through children. During the nights between New Year's and Christmas a baby in long clothes, especially if it be delicate looking, rents for as high as $5 or $6. His brothers and sisters from one to five years old bring $2, while those still older are worth a dollar on the coldest days.—Harper's Magazine.

Startling But True.

People the world over were horrified on learning of the burning of a Chicago theatre in which nearly six hundred people lost their lives, yet more than five times this number or over 3,000 people died from pneumonia during the same year, with scarcely a passing notice. Everyone of these cases resulted from a cold and could have been prevented by the timely use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. A great many who had every reason to fear pneumonia have warded it off by the prompt use of this remedy. The following is an instance of this sort: Too much cannot be said in favor of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and especially for colds and influenza. I know that it cured my daughter, Laura, of a severe cold, and I believe saved her life when she was threatened with pneumonia" W. D. Wilcox, Logan, New York: Sold by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

For Thin Babies

Fat is of great account to a baby; that is why babies are fat. If your baby is scrawny, Scott's Emulsion is what he wants. The healthy baby stores as fat what it does not need immediately for bone and muscle. Fat babies are happy; they do not cry; they are rich; their fat is laid up for time of need. They are happy because they are comfortable. The fat surrounds their little nerves and cushions them. When they are scrawny those nerves are hurt at every ungentle touch. They delight in Scott's Emulsion. It is as sweet as wholesome to them.

Two Kinds of Reading.

If we make the pages of our books merely a sort of pleasant maze in which to set our minds to wandering during idle hours we in reading shall have acquired a pastime that is usually harmless. But there is a vast difference between such a way of spending our time and the reading that teaches us to think as the greatest and wisest men and women have thought. Words stand in our minds for certain ideas or images. From what we read we learn to make these plain or hazy, clearly drawn pictures or carelessly executed sketches, and thus our powers of thinking are directly trained by our method of reading.—St. Nicholas.

...'S GOLDEN RELIEF will cure ... out in from 2 to 5 minutes

Names of Tennessee Towns.

When it came to naming her towns Tennessee did not forget the Good Book. She put an Ark in Meigs county, a Noah in Coffee, a Genesis in Cumberland, a St. John and a St. Luke in Jackson, a Joshua here and a Caleb there, here an Elijah and there a Samuel. Ruth and Naomi were not forgotten, and two Ebenezers were raised up, one in Knox and one in Humphreys county.

But Tennessee did not lay too much stress on Scriptural names. On the other hand, looking at the map one may readily ascertain that in the naming of her towns Tennessee played no favorites. From mythology she obtained Juno, Venus, Vulcan, Bacchus, Diana, Hercules, Neptune, Olympus and Delphi; from Shakespeare Romeo and Othello; from the Greek alphabet Alpha, Beta and Omega; from the church Methodist, Baptist, Priest, Pope, Friar and Tabernacle; from the family hearth Mamy, Bud, Aunt, Home and Family; from the poets Dante, Milton and Homer.—Indianapolis Star.

English Tailors' Vernacular.

The plaintiff in a recent libel action was not the "ninth part of a man" or he would have known that "jiggery-pokery" was tailor's slang for humbug. There are still many terms employed by the trade which are unknown to the outside public, and some of them show a pretty turn of fancy.

A young lady friend is a "long haired chum," a man's wife is his "left forepart," and the master's wife is the "marm puss" or "jiffness," "Legs and arms" is beer with no body in it, and to "give his pint for a man" means that he will vouch for him to the utmost of his power. Going to America is "crossing the damp pot." To spoil anything is to "make pig or pork" of it. A badly worked buttonhole is a "dead sow's eye," and a collar or lapel too large for the coat is a "pig's lug." A "paralytic fit" is a misfit, and a "misfit" is a man of awkward figure.—London Chronicle.

A Legend of the Seven Stars.

To the naked eye six of the Pleiades, or "Seven Stars," seem to be of about the same magnitudes, while the seventh is very dim. The dim star, the legend says, is Merope, one of the seven daughters of Atlas and Pleione, and her paleness is a punishment visited upon her for having married a mortal. The other sisters all married gods. Alcyone and Celaeno married Neptune. Electra, Maia and Taygeta were wedded to Jupiter and Sterope to Mars. Poor Merope united herself to Sisyphus, a common mortal, and was doomed to eternal dimness for her rash act. Besides this her husband must throughout all eternity roll a huge stone up a hill. As soon as it gets to the summit it rolls back, and his never ending task is again resumed.

Iodine.

If iodine be taken continuously for a length of time what is known as iodism results. Different individuals are affected differently by this drug. There are three forms of iodic intoxication—first, that in which the symptoms are those of gastric irritation; second, that characterized by nervous troubles, neuralgia, ringing in the ears, convulsive movements, disturbed intellect, and, third, that characterized by rapid emaciation, commencing mostly in the face, and severe nervous palpitations of the heart, with excessive appetite, which sometimes precedes and sometimes follows the loss of flesh. These symptoms are said to be most easily induced in goitrous persons.

The Old, Old Golden Rule.

"The Sayings of Lao Tzu," the great Chinese philosopher, who was born 600 years before Christ and fifty before Confucius, have been translated into English by Professor Lionel Giles of the British museum. They contain some utterances which remarkably anticipate the morality of the sermon on the mount—for instance, "Requite injury with kindness" and "To the not good I would be good in order to make them good."

Unconscious Frankness.

A London editor received from Berlin a printed notice of a new hair dye, described in English. "I deliver the hair dye from the fair to the deepest dark," the Berlin man said. Then, with a burst of candor, for which he cannot be sufficiently commended, he adds: "It produces a natural color and is thoroughly injurious."

Tropical Countries and Spices.

In tropical countries, between latitudes 23 degrees south and 23 degrees north of the equator, the inhabitants use spices with their food as we use pepper. A certain beneficial effect is caused to the digestion—namely, stimulant and carminative. But there is a secondary effect, which is perhaps even more beneficial, seen in the fact that the volatile oil passes out from the body mostly unchanged through various channels, but chiefly through the lungs and skin. So that in the tropics nature has provided antiseptics which in passing out by the lungs and skin kill the hurtful microbes which might be breathed in and also prevent to a great extent the attack of mosquitoes. It is a well known fact that insects, including mosquitoes, dislike volatile oils and will probably not attack an individual using spices as a food adjunct. It is interesting to note that spices grow where there is a high rainfall combined with much heat, conditions under which malarial influences prevail. The author quotes various authorities in regard to the antiseptic, antipyretic and other properties of aromatics.—Journal of Tropical Medicine.

Man Who Did Too Well.

"A man may sell too much of the article which he is displaying to his customers, and I know of a case in point which happened to a friend of mine," said a commercial man.

"My friend had a fine place offered him with an organ factory, and he accepted it, the salary being up in the four figures. He went out and to his first customer sold the entire output of the plant. The customer agreed to take all that the factory could make. Having nothing more to sell, my friend returned to the house well pleased with his success and for several days sat around smoking good cigars, while the firm patted him on the back. One day he came in, and the boss called him over, saying in this fashion:

"'I will have to give you the usual thirty days' notice. You have done so well that we have no further use for you or any traveling man. We are sorry to lose you, but you sold too much at the first crack.'"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Till Tapper.

During luncheon the subject of widows arose, and on this interesting topic many original ideas were expressed. One of the company said:

"Some widows are to be pitied; others, again, are to be felicitated. My father used to describe a widow of the latter sort. She lived in Maryland and kept a little village store. Her husband was a worthless fellow. He never worked, and he drank a great deal. A worthless fellow, I repeat, but nevertheless when he died suddenly many persons made calls of sympathy and condolence on the widow. My father did not call, but one day, stopping at the store to buy some trifle or other, he thought it was no more than right to say in a feeling tone:

"'You must miss your husband a great deal, madam?'

"'Well, sir,' said the widow, 'it does seem strange to come into the shop and find something in the till.'"

London in King James' Time.

King James I., in a letter to the lord mayor of London wrote as follows: "You will see to two things—that is to say, to the great devils and the little devils. By the great ones I mean the waggons, which, when they meet the coaches of the gentry, refuse to give way and yield as due. The little devils are the apprentices, who on two days of the year, which prove fatal to them, Shrove Tuesday and the 1st of May, are so riotous and outrageous that in a body three or four score thousand strong they go committing excesses in every direction, killing human beings and demolishing houses."

The Human Eye.

A novel theory has been advanced with regard to the human eye. It is that in the color of people's eyes is a protective adaptation to surroundings. Natives of regions where blue light is predominant—Swedes, Norwegians and sailors, for instance—have blue eyes, while near the equator or in sandy lands like South Africa, where intense yellow light is experienced, the eyes take a rich, dark, yellow hue, as those of Kaffirs and Malays, Italians and Spaniards.

SOUTH AMERICA

Interesting Incidents of Voyage from Atlantic to Pacific Coast on Board U. S. Steamer Chicago—Burial at Sea, an Impressive Ceremony—How the Natives of South America are Regarded by a Fulton Resident.

The following interesting letter has been received by the relatives of Mr. Clarence Partrick of this city, who is serving as machinist on the United States Cruiser Chicago, en route from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. The last letter was dated Port Castriess Island of St. Lucia, F. W. I., and was printed in a recent edition of THE TIMES:

Callao, Peru. Jan. 8—We have had a long and pleasant voyage and have fortunately escaped severe storms. Arrived at Montevideo, Dec. 14, and anchored in the Rio de la Plata, about four miles distant from city, which appeared to be delightfully situated, stretching for miles along the coast, and is perhaps one of the most important in South America. Much to my disappointment we were not permitted to go ashore. Resuming our journey on the 17th, we steamed for Valparaiso, Chili, passing through the straights of Magellan in preference to passing around Cape Horn, which saved at least 500 miles of the journey. The weather, although cool, was not uncomfortable, as this is the Summer season in this section. The scenery along the coast is magnificent; it is one vast range of mountains on either side, and as our vessel drew near to the narrowest point, about three miles distant from land, the mountains towered thousands of feet above and the dazzling sunlight glistened their snow-capped peaks. We passed through Glacier Bay on the 23d and saw a monster glacier of ice and snow.

Christmas day was not eventful. We would undoubtedly have had something extra in the shape of turkey had we been in port.

A sad and impressive incident occured on the morning of the 26th. A fireman, aged 26, succumbed to consumption. In the afternoon of the day, at two bells (5 o'clock), the boatswain's mate piped all hands on deck to bury the dead. The crew mustered on the quarter-deck, where the body was placed, sewed up in canvass, with weight at feet. Six bearers were placed on either side of the plank on which the remains reposed. The band played softly, "Asleep in the deep;" the chaplain read passages from the ritual; "Nearer my God to thee," by the band broke the stillness of the solemn proceedings; then there was a hush; the Marines fired a parting salute and the remains were permitted to slide into the angry waters. A purse of $300 was subscribed by members of the crew for the wife and children of the deceased.

We arrived at Valparaiso, Dec. 28. The city is crescent shaped and is most picturesquely situated on the side of a mountain. It has a good harbor. We enjoyed our first shore liberty, but some of the crew failed to return. The streets of the city are narrow, but are kept in fair condition. Modern electric cars, but not very modern steam railroads, are in use. Women conductors on the electric cars seemed to me quite a unique feature. While the natives were extremely polite, yet they appeared to be afraid of us. There were many merchant ships and war vessels in the harbor, including the United States steamers, Marblehead, New York and Bennington; a German gunboat, Falke; an Italian cruiser, Umbria, and the Chilian battleships, O'Higgins and Esmeralda. The Chilian navy, although not large, appears to be a fine one.

On New Year's eve, the O'Higgins, Esmeralda and New York were all decorated with incandescent lights from stem to stern, and as the New Year dawned the vessels fired salutes and sent rockets into the air. There was also a celebration ashore. The crew on board the vessels were dressed in grotesque uniforms, and with tin-pails, kettles and musical instruments, made the night hideous, so that sleep was impossible.

The admiral transferred his flag from the New York to the Chicago, Jan. 2. Some of the other officers were also transferred. We were fortunate in securing a new doctor and paymaster, as a result we get more fresh meat, better vegetables to eat and preserved fruit about every night for supper.

We left Valparaiso, Jan. 2, accompanied by the Marblehead and Bennington, and sailed for Callao, Peru, reaching that port on the 7th, where we will probably remain for a week and then steer for Acapulco, Magdalena Bay, Santiago, California and San Francisco will probaby be our ultimate destination.

Callao is situated on a very level stretch of land, fringed by a large range of mountains. The Peruvian navy is small in comparison with Chili's, the war vessels seeming to be converted merchant ships. Am looking forward with pleasure to shore liberty this week, when I hope to get better acquainted with the people. While engaged in writing this letter some visitors from ashore came along the berth decks, and seeing me writing, tipped their hats, probably imagining I was one of the ship's officers. CLARENCE PARTRICK.

SEWER BONDS TO BE ISSUED.

Common Council Decides to Raise Sum of $10,000 for West Side Sewer Construction.

On motion of Alderman Dilts, at a special meeting of the Common Council on Wednesday evening, that since the Board of Public Works of the city of Fulton has estimated that the total cost of the construction of a sanitary trunk sewer for that portion of the city lying west of the Oswego river, including the cost of maps, plans, supervision and engineering will be the sum of $30,000, and whereas the city of Fulton can issue bonds only in the sum of one-third of that amount on account of the constitutional debt limit, that registered bonds of the city in the amount of $1,000 be issued in part payment for the construction of said sewer according to the maps and plans adopted by the Board.

It is provided that the said bonds be of the denominations of $1,000 each, bearing date of January 1, 1905, and payable as follows: Five bonds of $1,000 each on January 1, 1910, and five bonds of $1,000 each on the first day of January, 1915, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. payable semi-annually.

For the purpose of paying interest on the bonds and the principal as the same becomes due and payable, the resolution provides that a tax be levied annually upon the taxable property of the city, to be apportioned between the east tax district and the west tax district in the manner provided in the city charter.

The City Chamberlain is authorized and directed to invite sealed proposals for the whole or any part of said bonds. Proposals will be received up to the 11th day of February at 2 o'clock p. m. and the Council will meet at that time for the purpose of considering the proposals.

Engagement Announced.

Mrs. Charles M. Allen formally announced the engagement of her sister, Miss Edith Hamilton, to Mr. Victor C. Lewis, at an enjoyable dinner given at her home on Third street on last Saturday evening. The friends of Miss Hamilton present were the Misses Marguerite Case, Eva Jane Waugh, Lucia Emerick, Manette Webb, Sara Lewis and Clara Piper. The dining room had been elaborately decorated, red predominating in the decorative scheme. The round table was embellished with five handsome silver candlesticks holding wax tapers with red silk shades, vieing in beauty with the immense cluster of Jacqueminot roses which graced the centre of the table. Red hearts were artistically arranged upon the table and at each guests plate was a beautiful red rose, attached by ribbon to which was a large red heart on which appeared the names of the young couple.

Miss Hamilton is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Hamilton of Second street and Mr. Lewis is the eldest son of the Hon. and Mrs. T. D. Lewis. They are deservedly popular with a very large circle of acquaintances all of whom are showering hearty and sincere congratulations upon them.

Accident on R. W. & O. R. R.

On Thursday night the R. W. & O. train, which was due in this city at 6:07, struck a freight car in the yards at Salina, delaying traffic for two hours. The train was drawn by engine No. 1,020 and was going slowly at the time, but the damage was sufficient to put it out of business. The box car was on a siding, but protruded out over the main track. The headlight and smokestack were torn off the engine and a big hole was stove in the boiler front. No one was injured.

SWEET CHARITY.

The Ball last Evening in Aid of City Hospital a Social and Financial Success—Entrancing Music, Artistic Decorations, Delicious Refreshments.

The City Hospital fund will be considerably augmented from the proceeds of the charity ball, which was held last evening. The successful function was the result of indefatigable effort on the part of the public and charitable-spirited ladies who compose the Hospital Association Auxiliary. They have proven themselves equal to the demands made upon them, and the hospital is now a permanent feature of our city, thanks to their efforts toward its financing. The ball was held in K. O. T. M. hall, which had been generously donated by that society for the purpose. The ball room was artistically decorated with the national colors, Chinese lanterns and evergreens, by Messrs. W. A. Smith, F. P. Connell and Maurice Hiller, and the effect was most pleasing to the eye Webb's full orchestra furnished entrancing music for the reception and for dancing.

The guests were received by Dr. and Mrs. C. J. Bacon, Mayor and Mrs. G. W. Brooker, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Murphy, Dr. and Mrs. E. J Cusack, Mr. and Mrs. George Chauncey, Prof. and Mrs. J. R. Fairgrieve, Mrs. J. H. Woodin and Dr. L. Fowler Joy.

Mrs. Bacon was gowned in black Brussels net over black taffeta, with elaborate trimmings of cut jet and velvet; Mrs. Brooker, in white silk mull over white silk, with trimmings of accordion plaiting and black velvet; Mrs. Murphy, in black satin with garniture of jet; Mrs. Cusack, in cream foulard, entrain, with lace, Dutchess satin and panne velvet trimmings; Mrs. Chauncey, in crepe de chine with trimmings of lace and jet; Mrs. Fairgrieve, in white point de sprit over light green taffeta, with trimmings of the same; Mrs. Woodin in light blue embroidered guimpure lace over taffeta, with jet trimmings.

Promptly at 9 o'clock the ball was opened with the grand march, Mr and Mrs. T. H. Webb, Mr. William Hornibrook and Miss Charlotte David leading.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

Presentation of an Excellent Program of Important Happenings.

The meeting of the Current Events Club on Monday evening, at the home of Mrs. A. Emerick, was a most interesting session. Mr. George G. Chauncey and Prof. J. R. Fairgrieve were leaders. President E. R. Redhead occupied the chair.

When business of minor importance was concluded, Mr. Chauncey introduced the Rev. James Vincent, who gave an instructive address on "Progressive and strong men." The necessity for a strong man at the head of the Russian government in its present emergency was cited; President Roosevelt's inimitable manner of dealing with live questions was commended; the religious awakening in Wales and England, which was being conducted along ethical lines, was dwelt upon in an interesting manner.

Mr. Chauncey called attention to Secretary Hay's forensic knowledge of diplomacy and the condensation of thought in the terse cablegrams sent to European nations during the progress of the war in the far east, when the integrity of the Chinese Empire was menaced; and to the reversal of opinion among Senators of opposite political faith, regarding President Roosevelt's action in the San Domingo matter.

The charges against Justice Hooker, formulated by the State Bar Association, was discussed by City Judge Wilson, who gave a history of the case up to the present time

The Rev. Charles B. Hill of Poonah, India, favored the assemblage with an interesting and illustructive summary of the effect the success of the Japanese arms had on the oriental mind, especially the cultured classes of India, who had contributed large sums of money toward the Red Cross Society of Japan; the checkmating of Russian aspirations toward India by the British government; the treaty with Afghanistan and the preparations to repel an invasion of India through that neighboring State, was listened to with intense interest, as it was told in concise, classical English.

It devolved on Prof. Fairgrieve to gather up the odds and ends of matters of importance, which was done in an admirable manner.

Prof. G. B. Duel, on behalf of the Executive Committee, introduced a resolution that an arrangement be entered into with some of the other literary clubs of the city to secure the services of Prof. Flick of Syracuse University to deliver an address on Russia. The motion prevailed and was referred to the Executive Committee for action.

The next meeting of the club will be held at the home of Mrs C. J. Bacon, and the leaders will be Dr. Harriet Doane, Miss Ada Wright, Mrs. H. J. Wilson and Miss Dugin.

BARGE CANAL INTERESTS.

Conference Held in this City with Members of the State Advisory Board and Owners of Water Power.

The members of the State Advisory Board, consisting of chairman Edward A. Bond; W. A. Breckenridge, hydraulic engineer at Niagara Falls; Brooks Frye, Major Thomas W. Simons, Henry A. Allen, division engineer; William B. Landreth, secretary to the Board and George E. Pierce, assistant Attorney-General visited Fulton on Thursday and held a conference with Resident Engineer Cushman. The water-power owners of the upper dam were represented by Messrs. F. E. Weeden, H. Lester Paddock and Ex-Attorney General Theodore Hancock; while Messrs. E. R. Redhead, G. G. Chauncey and F. A. Emerick represented the lower dam. Some additional details were inquired into by the Board and the plans were thoroughly discussed. The Advisory Board will report its decision at the next session which will be held at Albany at a later date.

Drowning Accident.

On Friday night about two o'clock Robert O'Neil, aged 33, met death by drowning while engaged in clearing ice from the wheel-pit of the American Woolen Mill. He was alone at the time, and the supposition is that he slipped on the ice and fell into the water, quickly becoming benumbed and unable to save himself. A party of people, it is reported, in passing the mill heard his cries for help but proceeded on their way without rendering any assistance. The body was recovered on Saturday morning and taken to the home of his uncle, Mr. William Hall, from where the funeral was held on Monday. The Rev. S. D. Robinson officiating. The deceased was a brother of James O'Neil who was killed by the cars near this city about two months ago. A father and two sister's survive.

MORE ROOM NEEDED.

State Department Calls Special Attention to Urgent Need of Better Accommodations for Scholars in Fulton Schools.

Fulton is confronted with the same proposition that all cities meet with, the lack of sufficient room to accommodate the constantly increasing school population. This problem has heretofore been carefully considered by the people of Fulton and must again come up for consideration. The following is the report made by the State inspector who recently visited our schools:

New York State Educational Department,
Inspections' Division,
Frank H. Wood, Chief
Albany, Jan. 19, 1905.

Board of Education, Fulton, N. Y.,

Gentlemen: The report of Inspector Lyttle on your city schools is before me. It shows that your special need is better school accommodations and that this need is an urgent one, as the following extracts from the report clearly prove:

"The Fourth street building contains academic department and eight grades, most of which occupy two grade rooms. Four grade rooms and the chemical labratory are located in outside buildings. From one of these buildings the two grades are compelled to come to the High school building for closet accommodations and pupils from the High school are obliged to go outside for instruction in chemistry.

"The larger number of the study and class rooms, both in the Fourth street building and in the auxiliary buildings, are either over-crowded or defective in ventilation.

"In the academic study room, 134 pupils are seated and 20 more will need to be accommodated there next term. The room is 60 feet by 33 feet with about 15 feet ceilings. It will be seen that the floor space is already deficient. It is lighted by four windows on each side and one small window in the end, giving a total window space of 189 square feet which is less than one-half of the State standard.

"A portion of the building is heated by the Smead system of gravity ventilation and heating. In the first and second grade primary rooms, the heating and ventilation are both very defective. There seemed to be virtually no flow of foul air from the outlets and in one of these rooms a gas stove not connected with a flue is used to supplement the heat. Such a burner would dangerously vitiate the air of the whole room in 15 minutes; 43 pupils are seated in this room.

"Fifty-eight pupils are seated in the sixth-grade room of the Fourth street building. The room is 38 feet by 22 feet and the height of the ceiling is about 15 feet. No more than 48 pupils should be seated in this room according to the State standards for floor space.

"A fifth-grade room in the old seminary building is 19 feet by 27 feet, and the ceilings are comparatively low; 44 pupils are seated in this room. Neither floor space nor air space are properly provided.

"In fact, in most of the rooms the limit of safety has been reached or passed."

This is certainly a serious situation. The laws of the State require parents to send their children to the public school during certain years of their lives or provide equivalent instruction for them at their own expense elsewhere. It follows that it is the first duty of a school district or municipality to see that the children are well housed; that ample room is provided, and that the building is comfortable and sanitary. Prompt and vigorous steps should be taken to adopt and carry out needed relief measures.

I find that the equipment of your school is on the whole satisfactory. A physical labratory for individual experimentation is especially needed.

A substantial addition of suitable juvenile literature should also be made at the earliest opportunity for use in the different grade rooms in connection with the regular class work.

I am pleased to quote the following regarding the efficiency of instruction:

"In general, I find the schools in Fulton in a very good condition so far as discipline and work is concerned. They are well supplied with books and apparatus and seem to have an efficient teaching force."

Yours respectfully,
FRANK H. WOOD,
Chief Inspections Division.

The February American Boy

The Washington's Birthday number of The American Boy is replete with matter of historical interest. Its contents include a full page, illustrated article, "How Artists Pictured Washington," "Francis Hampton, the proud little lad of Valley Forge," "A Nation's Honor at the Pen's Point," "A Washington's Birthday Party," "The Story of Lincoln's Boyhood," "Washington and the Flag." The cover of The American Boy this month is an intensely interesting one, as it represents Washington at prayer in the Valley Forge days, being a reproduction of a photograph of the bas-relief recently put into the East Side Y. M. C. A. building in New York city. The stories this month, in addition to those named, are further chapters of Kirk Monroe's "For the Mikado," further chapters of "My Four Years at West Point," the first of a new series of bear stories entitled "Capturing a Thief," the story of the little Italian entitled "What happened to Pietro," "A thousand Miles in a Small Boat," "A Pirati al Misadventure" "The Young Midshipman's Adventure," "Down Brownlow Hill," "Grog" and "Patters Helps the Editor" As leading articles of a miscellaneous nature are the Editor's page, "Just Between Ourselves," in which he discusses the subject of 'Quiting School," "The Boy Who is Faithful," "A Message from Governor Dockery of Missouri to American Boys," a full page illustration of the Company of the Battleship Indiana. "How the Batwa Pygmies were Photographed," "Amateur Journalism," "Stamps, Coins and Curios," "The Boy Photographer," "Clever Work with the Pocket Knife" and "Puzzles,"; 32 pages; 64 illustrations; $1.00 a year. ARTHUR HENRY HOWE

A Native of Oswego County who Commits Bigamy, Murder and Suicide

Arthur Henry Howe, aged 38, said to be a native of Parish, Oswego county, killed himself in Burlington, Wis., on Saturday last, after murdering his landlady, Mrs D. F. Foley, by slashing her throat with a razor. According to all accounts Howe had a plurality of wives living—three at least, one of whom is now living in Syracuse.

When the murder was committed, Howe was in the boarding house alone with Mrs. Foley. The latter's little girl, ten years old, had gone on an errand and returning in an hour stumbled over Howe's dead body in the kitchen. She gave the alarm and neighbor's entering the house found Mrs. Foley's body in a small pantry. Two bullets had been fired into her head and her throat had been slashed with a razor. From the appearance of the house a desperate struggle had taken place. The only motive for the tragedy is believed by neighbors to have been Mrs Foley's refusal of a proposition made by Howe to elope with him.

Didn't Know it Was Loaded.

While Lot Fuller and Jerome Daniels were at work pressing hay on the Lewis Shraeder farm at Central Square on Friday, Daniels picked up a gun which he did not know was loaded, pointed it at Fuller and pulled the trigger. The patient was taken into Mr. Shraeder's house, Dr. Wilcox was called, his injuries were dressed and he was made as comfortable as possible.

To Determine Right of Plaintiff

An action has been brought by Mary E. Hackett of Volney against George H. View and F. A. Emerick before Justice Wright in Oswego. The plaintiff owns a farm of 171 acres of land in the town of Volney, across the road from the Great Bear Springs, owned by Mr. F. A. Emerick George H. View leased the farm for one year, with the privilege of five years and an option to purchase at the price of $8,000. Mr. View assigned the lease and option to Mr. Emerick.

The defense claims that the option gives the right to purchase the Hackett farm for $8,000, but the plaintiff claims that the option gives her the right to sell at that figure, but does not oblige her to dispose of it at that amount and the action was brought for the purpose of reforming the lease so that the obligations of the plaintiff will be distinctly understood.

There are two large springs of water on this farm which are said to be valuable. It was said by Mr. Emerick's attorneys that he does not desire the springs, but wants the farm at the price named in the option in order to have a right of way across it to the N. Y. O. & W. railroad.

Witnesses sworn by the plaintiff placed the value of property in that part of Volney at $35 an acre.

The jury reported Saturday afternoon in favor of the plaintiff, fixing the value of the farm at $4,000 and allowing a reformation of the lease.

Testing the Cows.

To determine exactly what a cow produces in a year every milking must be weighed and sampled, but if the herd is given a one week test every three months it will be sufficient to yield valuable results. All the apparatus necessary for this purpose is a spring balance, as many common glass fruit jars as there are cows in the herd and a four ounce bottle Babcock milk tester.—Cor. Farm Visitor.

It has supplanted discomfort with ease—it has banished the impossible and exaggerated figure produced by the old corset idea. THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

The more Magazines there are, the more Indispensable is The Review of Reviews

"Indispensable," "The one magazine I feel I must take," "The world under a field-glass," "An education in public affairs and current literature,"—these are some of the phrases one hears from noted people who read the Review of Reviews. The more magazines there are, the more necessary is the Review of Reviews, because it brings together the best that is in all the most important monthlies of the world. Such is the flood of periodical literature that nowadays people say that the only way to keep up with it is to read the Review of Reviews. Entirely over and above this reviewing section, it has more original matter and illustrations than most magazines, and the most timely and important articles printed in any monthly.

Probably the most useful section of all is Dr. Albert Shaw's illustrated "Progress of the World," where public events and issues are authoritatively and lucidly explained in every issue. Many a subscriber writes, "This department alone is worth more than the price of the magazine." The unique cartoon department, depicting current history in caricature, is another favorite. The Review of Reviews covers five continents, and yet is American, first and foremost.

Men in public life, the members of Congress, professional men, and the great captains of industry who must keep "up with the times," intelligent men and women all over America, have decided that it is "indispensable."

DELIBERATE SHOOTING

J. Kennedy Sent Seven Bullets Into Body of H. M. Ebner.

WAS MADDENED BY JEALOUSY.

Waited For Victim's Return Home and Fired Two Shots, Both Taking Effect—Fired Three More While Man Was Running and When He Fell Sent Two More Into Prostrate Form.

Pittsburg, Feb. 6.—Maddened by jealousy and the alleged infidelity of his wife, James C. Kennedy, foreman of a shop in New Kensington, sent seven bullets into the body of Howard M. Ebner, a young telegraph operator, Sunday. Kennedy gave himself up and was lodged in the jail and Mrs. Kennedy is being held as an accessory.

The shooting was planned with deliberation. Kennedy and his wife lived in the upstairs rooms of a house whose first floor is occupied by the family of J. M. Lynch. Ebner boarded with the latter.

Ebner was night agent at Braeburn for the Pennsylvania railroad and Kennedy knew he would return from work in the morning on the 9:25 train. He kept watch until Ebner, accompanied by Lynch, came in sight.

He then left the house and walking up to the men, pressed a revolver almost against Ebner's body and fired two shots, both taking effect.

The wounded man started to run. Kennedy fired the three remaining bullets at the fleeing man, each taking effect, but failed to stop him. Kennedy then started in pursuit, putting two fresh cartridges in his revolver as he ran.

When Ebner reached the back door of his boarding house he fell face downward. Kennedy advanced and coolly bending over the prostrate man, sent two more bullets into his head, leaving his victim lying where he had fallen. Kennedy then went to a police station and surrendered.

Last week Kennedy is said to have discovered that Ebner had been giving whisky to Mrs. Kennedy while her husband was at work. He is also alleged to have secured a confession from Mrs. Kennedy that she had been criminally intimate with the telegrapher.

KILLED IN AN ALLEY.

A Woman Murdered In Pittsburg While on Way From Market.

Pittsburg, Feb. 6.—The dead body of Mrs. J. A. Kirkpatrick was found Sunday in the back yard of an unoccupied house at 9 Jackson street, Allegheny, only a short distance from her home. She had been murdered and the morgue physician states that the woman had been criminally assaulted. Suspicion rests on a man as yet unknown to the police but who evidently was an acquaintance of the woman.

For the past several months Mrs. Kirkpatrick had been living in Jackson street with her husband and 18 months old babe. Saturday night she took her child to her mother's home on Isabella street, so she could attend to the marketing.

At 10 o'clock she started for her home with her purchases, intending to return for the child. After leaving the street car near her home she was seen talking to a tall man wearing a high hat and long overcoat.

A few monents later she was evidently dragged into Creighton alley, where she was heard to exclaim: "Oh don't, I'll do anything you say." When the body was discovered it was found that the woman had been choked to death and traces in the snow showed that she had been dragged for 12 feet along the alley to the yard gate and thrown inside.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick's assailant is believed to have been an acquaintance of hers, as the man answering the description of the one seen talking to her called twice at her home during the evening while she was away and asked for her.

Woman Instantly Killed.

New York, Feb. 6.—A handsome young woman, variously described as Louise Schroeder and Louisa Adams, was shot and instantly killed Sunday by Emil Bollinger, a janitor, who was arrested after being seriously injured in an attempt to escape.

The shooting took place in the dining room of a hotel at Third avenue and 79th street, where the woman and two men had been during the night.

Bollinger, who had been sitting in another part of the room watching the trio for some hours, suddenly advanced to the table at which they sat and drawing a revolver fired twice, shooting the woman through the neck and through the heart. As she fell Bollinger threw away the pistol and started to run, when he was attacked by the woman's companions and in the struggle that ensued was thrown down stairs and severely injured. When removed to the hospital two more revolvers were found on him.

Bollinger would offer no explanation of the tragedy except to say that he had shot the woman because she had ruined his life. The police learned that Bollinger's wife separated from him two years ago on account of his attentions to the woman whom he killed.

DISCLAIMED BY WORKMEN.

Say Deputation to Visit the Czar Was Selected by Employers.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 6.—The workmen to the number of 4,000 in the car shops here have drawn up a manifesto disclaiming the delegates who were put forward as representing them in the deputation which visited Emperor Nicholas at Tsarskoe-Selo on Wednesday, Feb. 1. They assert these men were selected by the employers and were not representatives of the workmen.

The employes of one or two other factories may follow suit, but the workmen in general are inclined to stand by the deputation.

There were a few slight collisions between Lessner's workmen and the police guarding the factory Sunday. Poland, however, continues to be the storm center of the disturbances.

Though the strike has ceased in some establishments it has assumed a more important phase by its extension to the great coal mines and sugar factories; and three more governments have been placed under martial law. Police and Cossacks have had to break up a number of demonstrations and quell disorders, but as yet there has been no repetition of rioting on the scale of the first collisions.

Strikes in Tiflis and other parts of the Caucasus are frequent, and the present one does not attract much attention except as bearing on the general situation in Russia.

Russian Operations Suspended.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 6.—According to General Kuropatkin's latest reports, which indicate the wounding of a third Russian general, Dembowski, the operations at Sandiapu and the fighting at Shakhe have been momentarily suspended. The Russians successfully repulsed the latest attack of the Japanese eastward with heavy loss.

The cold is still intense, there being 24 degrees of frost. There are indications that the Japanese are preparing to break the inactivity on their own account as soon as the weather moderates.

The war office is closed and no further facts regarding the reports that General Kuropatkin is about to give up his command can be obtained. The rumor is generally discredited.

Proposals For Reform.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 6.—An imperial ukase has been issued appointing M. Saburoff, a member of the council of the empire, president of the special conference to debate the committee of ministers' proposals for reform of the senate and for the framing of laws for the local administrative courts. The emperor expresses a desire for the speedy conclusion of the labors of the conference.

Disavowed Roudneff's Action.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 6. — Foreign Minister Lamsdorff, in an official note to Sir Charles Hardinge, the British ambassador, has formally disavowed the action of Deputy Chief of Police Roudneff of Moscow in posting a placard asserting that the strikers were assisted with money from Japanese and British sources with the purpose of crippling the arsenals and other government works.

Death of a Presidential Candidate.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 6.—Rev. C. E. Bentley of Lincoln, Neb., candidate of the Liberty party for president of the United States in 1896, died here Saturday night under mysterious circumstances, and the police are investigating his death. The body was removed from a lodging house to the morgue and was not identified until Sunday. When search of his clothing was made it was found that his gold watch was missing and that his pockets contained only $1.05. An autopsy was held and it was found that death was due to heart disease. The police are searching for the woman who accompanied Bentley, although they do not believe she is responsible for his death.

Jumped Into Burning Oil Tank.

Sistersville, W. Va., Feb. 6.—Linsey Owens, a prosperous farmer, committed suicide in a horrible manner. Maddened through jealousy, so it is alleged, Owens fired a shot from a revolver at his wife and then walked to the farm of a neighbor, where an oil tank was located, and after setting fire to the oil deliberately plunged into the burning fluid. When the fire could be extinguished and the body recovered it had been burned beyond recognition. Mrs. Owens probably will recover. Owens was about 55 years old, had been married four times and was the father of a large family.

Sudden Death on a Train.

Batavia, N. Y., Feb. 6.—E. S. Kimball of Brookline, Mass., died on a train between Buffalo and Batavia Sunday from heart disease. Mr. Kimball, who was about 60 years old and is believed to be a traveling salesman, was going from Chicago to Boston. The body was taken from the train at Batavia.

Three Children Drowned.

Brownstown, Pa., Feb. 6.—The three children of George W. Hoeffner were drowned Sunday in Conestoga creek They were Edwin, 17; Lizzie, 11, and John, 9. Edwin had been skating and pulling his brother and sister on a sled, when the ice gave way, throwing them into the water.

NEW YORK'S WILD ANIMALS.

No Widespread Destruction of Deer in the Adirondack Herds.

Albany, Feb. 6.—Forest, Fish and Game Commissioner Middleton reports the results of a careful investigation to show the condition of the Adirondack and other state deer, the reasons for the mortality which, it has been asserted, existed among them, and the results of the past hunting season.

It appears from the report of the secretary of the commission that the condition of the more important wild animals has been entirely satisfactory to the sportsmen. Although the hunters had a poor season in the Adirondacks in 1904, the aggregate number of deer killed was greater than during any other season within the past five years except that of 1903. The total number of carcasses sent out by the express companies during the past season was 1,618. In 1903 it was 1,961, in 1902 it was 1,354, in 1901 it was 1,062 and in 1900 it was 1,020.

The report also calls attention to the fact that the investigation made as to the mortality reported among the deer shows that although a number of deer died in the Adirondacks and on Long Island during the winter, there was no general epidemic and no widespread destruction among the herd. In order to secure the best possible advice on the subject of the mortality among the deer, the commissioner had autopsies performed on a number of the dead animals.

The substance of the scientific findings appears to be that the prolonged cold weather and the deep snow which kept the deer from securing their natural food reduced many of them to the condition which resulted in their death.

The report indicates that the condition of the elk in the Adirondacks is satisfactory, but that unless many more moose are liberated there the experiment of restocking the forests with this animal cannot be considered a success.

Interesting statistics concerning the black bear are also given. With reference to the beaver it is stated that the commission has secured three pairs and one additional male with the $500 appropriation provided by the last legislature and that this action has met with the approval of those interested in securing the return of this interesting animal to the forest.

VARIOUS REFORMS URGED.

Proclamation Issued Under Auspices of the National Grange.

New York, Feb. 6.—A proclamation "addressed to the American people" will be promulgated today from the various state capitals under the auspices of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, and various national labor and agricultural organizations, declaring that Washington's birthday be observed as "farm, home and factory day."

It advises that upon this day the people concentrate their thoughts upon the conditions for the betterment of the home, farm and factory.

The proclamation recites a number of reforms as the object of the movement, among them being government authority over railroads "sufficient to abolish unjust rates and discriminations"; a parcels post permitting packages up to 11 pounds weight, and a post check currency system.

The proclamation urges every one to communicate with his congressman in Washington in behalf of these measures. It is signed by the governors of Ohio, Wyoming and South Dakota, Aaron Jones, master of the National Grange, and various officers of labor organizations.

Remains of Italian Liberator.

Rome, Feb. 6.—Riccicotti Garibaldi, the last surviving son of the Italian liberator, has addressed a petition to parliament to definitely settle the question of the final disposition of his father's remains. It was the dying wish of General Garibaldi that his body should be cremated and the ashes dispersed; but the government authorities stepped in and forbade it, although his son would have carried out his wishes. Riccicotti Garibaldi in his petition says he feels that his last days are near, and so asks that the chambers shall settle the question once and forever, and demands that respect be shown for his father's desires.

Fire Engine Exploded.

Birmingham, Ala., Feb. 6. — Fire which started early Sunday in the wholesale commission house of Franklin, Stiles and Franklin destroyed property valued at $240,000. Assistance was asked from the neighboring cities of Montgomery, Atlanta, Chattanooga and Gadsden, but was cancelled when the wind changed and a heavy rain fell. Two firemen were severely injured by falling walls and one of the smaller steamers exploded, but no casualties were connected with the latter accident.

Dress Caught Fire From Stove.

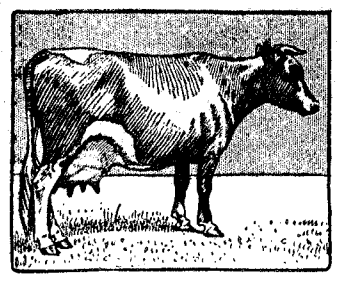
Hoosick Falls, Feb. 6.—Sarah Dobbert, the 4-year-old child of Frederick Dobbert, was burned to death by her dress catching fire from the kitchen stove. Her mother, who heard the girl's screams, reached the room too late to save the child's life.

Strike of Miners In Belgium.

Charleroi, Feb. 6.—The miners' congress by a large majority has decided to declare a general strike on Monday.

Dairy and Creamery

The dairy cow to make us a profit must be housed in a comfortable stable these cold wintry days. Thus we admonished at an institute a few days ago, writes L. W. Lighty in National Stockman. "But," said a practical farmer, "with feeds so high and dairy products so low, we cannot afford the expense of building such stables as the speaker advises. Our income does not warrant such an outlay."



Then another practical farmer spoke thus: "I know my cows were very uncomfortable, and I was uncomfortable milking and doing the chores. While the weatherboarding acted as a wind break, the temperature on the inside of the stable was nearly as low as on the outside, and I knew it was unprofitable, but I began to feel that it was inhuman. I collected old newspapers (they were plenty after the campaign) and pretty heavily covered the entire inside, and over all this I put some heavy hardware paper that cost me but little. Next I went to the sawmill and purchased some waste boards very cheaply and boarded up the entire inside of the stable. Now the stable is perfectly comfortable, the cows eat less and give more milk, and, while I keep no particular account, I know those cows have already paid all I invested in the extra milk produced, and on Sunday morning when I go to church there is just a little less weight on my conscience."

Food Value of Cheese.

Undoubtedly many people underestimate the value of cheese as a human food. Comparing it pound for pound with beef, it furnishes nearly twice as much food value. Cheese is composed of about 37 per cent water, 34 per cent fat, 24 per cent casein and 5 per cent ash, while meat contains about 60 per cent water, 15 per cent protein, 20 per cent fat and 5 per cent ash. Full cream cheese well cured is a wholesome, digestible and comparatively cheap food.

A Prolific Milker.

Helena Burke, not only the foundation cow of the Helena Burke family, but also one of the foundation cows of Brookside herd, is one of the few twenty-five pound cows having three daughters with A. R. O. records averaging over twenty pounds each, says Holstein-Friesian Register. At the time of making her official record of 25.45 pounds butter in seven days she produced in one day 98⅞ pounds milk, and later, at twelve years old, she gave in one day during an official test 98¾ pounds milk. In 1897 she produced in four months 10,000¼ pounds milk, an average for 122 days of 82.78 pounds per day. Three two-year-old heifers sired by her son, De Kol Burke, attained in official test the unparalleled average of 18⅜ pounds each.

Clean Milk.

Stop the dirt from getting into the milk. This can be done easily and quickly. If the milker will carry with him a damp cloth and carefully wipe off the udder and the parts immediately around it the trouble will to a great extent be prevented. All of the coarser particles of dirt will be rubbed off and the finer particles of dust dampened so that they will not fall into the pail. This work will require but a few moments of extra time and prevent much after trouble in the way of sour and ill flavored cream. The cow should be milked in a place in which the air is free from dust. In winter or when the cows are kept in the stable never do anything to stir up dust or strong smells just before milking.

Lo-Co-Moter Ataxia. Now in Good Health.

Dr. M. M. Fenner, Fredonia, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—After a sickness of more than five years, I was tempted to try your Kidney and Backache Cure. In the mean time I had tried or been under about 20 doctors care at the beginning of my trouble. It was thought to be only a local one, but as time wore on I became worse, so that at last I could not stand on my feet. Then my arms and hands became useless.

But at last after a very long time the use of both came back to me so that I could walk a little with the aid of crutches. The Doctors helped me to this point and no further, and for 2½ years I kept in the same condition.

Through the use of your Kidney and Backache Cure I am now in good health.

Will say, the doctors told me—all of them—that there was no cure for me, because I was then suffering from Lo-Co-Moter Ataxia.

I Remain yours Respectfully,

THE WORLD'S WORK

DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & COMPANY
New York

N. B.—ANDREW CARNEGIE says: "I think THE WORLD'S WORK remarkable."

Speak For Yourself, John.

A story is told of Mr. Coke, an ancestor of Lord Leicester, which is like the John Alden and Priscilla Mullens romance read backward. "At about seventy years of age," says Home Notes, "Mr Coke was a bachelor and very anxious that his heir presumptive, a nephew, should take unto himself a wife." So the uncle selected a handsome and clever young woman, and the nephew obediently began to his addresses, however, in a half hearted way. When he at length proposed the girl rejected him, and when Mr. Coke begged her to reconsider her decision she promptly replied to the old man, "I'll never marry your nephew, but I'll marry you if you like." He did like, and the child of their marriage cut the nephew out of an immense fortune.

The Knowledge That Pays.

If you glance round at the work of some of our big men you will be surprised to see how many have made their reputation by doing one small thing, but doing it well. If a man gets to the front in one narrow subject the world credits him with knowledge of all the rest. It is, however, even easier to acquire a large general knowledge than an advanced special knowledge of one narrow subject. The specialty must not be too narrow either. It is often said that the pursuit of knowledge has a nobility of its own. But what knowledge? No knowledge is worth obtaining for its own or any other sake unless it is or will probably be useful to man.—James Swinburne in Electrical Review.

Dairy in Friesland.

The cows in Friesland are not fed any grain during the summer, except in extremely dry seasons. About Oct. 1 most of the dairy farmers put a few of the best cows in the stables and feed them grass, mostly of the third cut. The rest of them are blanketed and left out until the weather becomes very wet and cold, when they are taken to the stable. They do not leave it again before spring. The feed through the winter consists mainly of hay, oil cake and cornmeal.

Prevention of Butter Mold.

As a preventive of mold on butter the following practice is highly recommended: Soak the parchment paper linings immediately before using in a saturated brine to which have been added three ounces of pure formalin to the gallon of brine. Place the paper in the boxes without drying. Keep the brine in a special covered vessel. Boil the brine every week, and add fresh formalin in the same proportion as at first.

Mating of Dairy Cattle.

Bodily vigor or constitution is best indicated by the structure of the abdominal muscles. A strong, powerful lower belly is almost invariably an indication of great vitality. If either a bull or cow lack in this particular do not breed them if you can help it.—Hoard's Dairyman.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 8, 1905.

AN effort is being made by Emperor Wilhelm of Germany to dissever the strong political tie which binds Russia and France. European nations appreciate the necessity of an early peace between Russia and Japan, but the German Emperor's activity in the matter is regarded as more anti-French than pro-Russian.

A CAUCUS of the Republican members of the House of Representatives will be held in Washington next Friday afternoon for the purpose of considering a "rule to govern the House in its consideration of the bill enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix railroad rates." The merits of the bill, as well as suggested amendments, will undoubtedly be discussed at the caucus.

A JOINT SESSION of the Senate and House of Representatives will be held this Wednesday, and Theodore Roosevelt will be formally declared to have been elected President of the United States. This announcement will be preceded by the opening and counting of the Electoral College votes. In view of the interest which Washington always evinces in this solemn ceremonial, admission to the galleries was by card only.

THE Joint Statehood bill, which proposed to make two new States out of the four Territories of Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Arizona and New Mexico, has passed the Senate, with Arizona eliminated. The bill was carefully framed for the protection of the civilized Indians and the promotion of education, and made strong claims to the support of all those who desired to make the most liberal response possible to the aspirations of the people in the Territories, while safeguarding the rights of people in the present States and the welfare of the whole country.

ATTORNEY GENERAL MAYER proposes to make the argument in the United States Supreme Court in the action brought by the corporations. Every county in the State is interested in the upholding of the law. The sum of $25,000,000 is involved. If the decision of the Court of Appeals of this State is sustained, the various corporations will in the aggregate have to pay over to the tax collectors in the various counties the net sum of $18,412,884 for the years 1900, 1901, 1902 and 1903. Another year has slipped by since the last official computation by the State Tax Commissioners, and the aggregate net sum now overdue and unpaid is more than $25,000,000.

To Investigate the Hooker Charges.

Assemblyman F. G. Whitney has been made a member of the Assembly Judiciary Committee to investigate the acts of Justice Warren B. Hooker in connection with the Fredonia and Dunkirk postoffices

The committee will hold all of its sessions in Albany, figuring that it will be cheaper to bring witnesses three from Fredonia, Dunkirk and Jamestown than for the committee of thirteen members to go to the western part of the State and hold sessions.

The resolution calls for an investigation by the entire committee, and the employment of former Deputy Attorney-General Henry Comin, of Madison County, as a special counsel. The committee is to report to the Assembly [illegible]

She is survived by her husband, two sons, John and Frank of this city, and one daughter, Pearl, of Franklin, N. Y. Funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

Appeal For Caleb Powers.

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 1, 1905.

EDITOR TIMES: The undersigned, regardless of political affiliations, have been constituted a committee to solicit and disburse a fund for the defense of Caleb Powers

The Court of Appeals of Kentucky, having reversed the judgment sentencing him to death, remands the case to the Scott Circuit Court for another trial Mr. Powers has been subjected to three trials and three appeals from the judgments of the Circuit Court, all of which have been reversed. His case goes back now to be tried out from the beginning. The three trials and three appeals to which he has been subjected have exhausted all his means. His parents and other relatives have sacrificed everything they possessed for him and he is now wholly dependent on the fund that this committee may raise for his defense. The prosecution has at its disposal, in addition to the ordinary machinery of the Courts, $100,000, which the Legislature appropriated for the conviction of those charged with the murder of Senator Goebel. Caleb Powers, while steadfastly maintaining his innocence, has been confined in jail nearly five years. We feel called upon to say that our sole purpose is to obtain a fair trial for Mr Powers, and a fair trial by impartial jury is all that he demands. We believe the people of Kentucky will be satisfied with nothing less. To meet the necessary expenses of his fourth trial a large sum is absolutely necessary. At the former trials, which lasted from five to seven weeks each, Mr. Powers was compelled to submit to trial in the absence of many of his witnesses by reason of the fact that he had not the means to pay their expenses to attend. Many of these witnesses are very poor, and while anxious to testify in the case, have not the means to do so at their own expense, living as they do at a distance, yet their testimony is of vital importance. Funds must be provided to secure their attendance. This alone will require a large sum of money. In addition to this expense, the stenographer's charges, costs of transcripts of testimony, expenses of interviewing distant witnesses, counsel fees, and other expenses incident to the trial will require, in the opinion of the committee, all that can be raised. The State can procure everything needed by it, and justice to Mr. Powers requires no less for him.

Judge Barker, who wrote the opinion reversing the judgment of the lower Court, says,

"Nothing more surely tends to enhance the respect men owe the law than a firmly rooted conviction that its judgments are the offspring of even-handed justice, and of its temple an impartial jury is the chief corner-stone."

It is now the hope and expectation of the people that Caleb Powers will at last be tried by an impartial jury The committee makes this appeal for a fund to pay the necessary expenses of this fourth trial, and will undertake to receive and disburse all contributions with the utmost care and fidelity. We hope for a fund sufficiently large to enable Mr. Powers to obtain a trial that all fair men will say was fair.

Contributions should be sent to Mr. John Marshall, treasurer of the committee, Louisville Trust Company Building, and we would request that responses to this appeal be as prompt as possible, for the trial will probably take place within a short time, and we must be prepared.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which it nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

The Language of Beggars.

In describing their possessions and their environment professional beggars use nicknames. Thus a cent is known as an "Indian." Other coins are known as "white money." A detective is a "bull," and a policeman is a "bull in harness." A thief is a "gun," and a pickpocket is a "dip." A gold watch is a "red kettle." Stamps are known as "stickers." Money is "cush." A horse car is a "rattler." When a beggar is arrested he is said to "fall." The workhouse is known as the "band house." The penitentiary is known as the "big house." A revolver is a "rod." A beggar who gives out cards on which are printed appealing bits of rhyme is known as a "throw out." One who sits cross legged on the walk is known as a "flopper." One who holds you up on the sidewalk is known as a "strong arm." So it runs on, with so many expressions covering so many figures of speech that one not familiar with their argot might listen to their talk for hours without catching the real meaning of the conversation.—Theodore Waters in Everybody's Magazine.

The Curse of the Permanent Job.

It is interesting and possibly important to note that the chief cause of matrimonial failures is the chief cause of failure in other directions. It is what may be called the curse of the "permanent job." Give a man what is or seems to him to be a permanent job, and he begins to go to seed. Ambition dies, industry withers, skill dries up. Before it is too late transfer him to a job where there are but two certainties—that he can keep it if he does well, that he will lose it if he doesn't. At once there is an amazing change, and the man who was degenerating into a sour, querulous failure is developing into a cheerful, useful success. The husband who says, "Now I've got her" and ceases to try to please or the wife who acts in the same spirit is on the way to matrimonial disaster. Whether or not the marriage was made in heaven, it's got to be lived on earth. Nor are the laws of human nature suspended for the benefit of the married.—Saturday Evening Post.

Lowell (Mass.) Citizen, Jan. 24: At a well-attended meeting of the First Congregational church last night, a vote was passed to extend a call to Rev. Clifton H. Mix of Cliftondale, Mass. The vote was unanimous and the expressions used by the speakers before the vote was taken were most complimentary to Mr. Mix. There was not one dissenting voice to mar the unanimity of the call. Mr. Mix has preached at the church twice and made a very fine impression on each occasion. He is married and has four children. [Mr. Mix was a former pastor of the State Street M. E. church in this city. He was an excellent preacher and was very much beloved by his congregation.]

Fulton's red-light district has been established, but it is under the absolute control of the police department. Chief Ross conceived the idea of having a red incandescent light placed near the roof of the Vienna bakery building on South First street, as before stated in the Times, so that any one requiring the services of an officer at night may now call up police headquarters by telephone. If no response is received, the Fulton Telephone Company will turn on a switch and the red light will signal to any officer on post that his services are needed. It will be the officer's duty, if he can not reach headquarters promptly, to call up "central" and learn what is wanted. This is a simple but excellent method and can be worked to advantage. Praise is due the Fulton Telephone Company for their hearty co-operation in the matter.

The Fortnightly Shakespeare Club was entertained on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 4, at the Lewis House by Mrs. F. W. Stearne. After the regular program was carried out, a curtain was drawn and the "Tomb Scene" from the fifth act of "Romeo and Juliet" was given by some of the members in full costume, and with stage setting complete. The part of Romeo was acted by Mrs. Stearne; Juliet by Miss Marguerite Case; Friar Laurence by Mrs. A. H Grant; Paris by Miss Clara Bacon, and the page by Miss Rena Mead. The scene was rendered in the perfect manner by all, showing most thorough and painstaking study of the lines and unquestionable dramatic ability. The tomb, with Juliet lying on her bier, in the sleep which so resembled death, was most realistic. The death of Paris and "Romeo and Juliet" were exquisitely portrayed. The Fortnightly Shakespeare Club gave a most enthusiastic and hearty vote of thanks to the performers at the end of the presentation.

A Leak In Your Cellar

The leak referred to is not a gas leak; the trouble's in your coal bin; the fuel in it leaks—if coal's your fuel. No doubt about this; here are the figures—coal, $6.25 and coke, $4.00. This difference in cost is surely leakage—$2.25 on each and every ton of fuel.

NOTE: In bulk a ton of coke is double that of coal. It generates a greater heat; its lasting qualities are good; throws off no gas; is free from dust and never leaves a clinker.

Salting the Butter.

Let the butter drain reasonably well, say for fifteen to twenty minutes, before salting. Use only pure salt and salt butter intended for the British market very lightly. Not more than 3 per cent, or about half an ounce of salt to the pound of butter, should be used. It is an excellent plan to salt in the churn, and after mixing the salt into the butter allow it sufficient time to dissolve before working. The one working of the butter will then be sufficient.

CHOOSING A DAIRY COW.

Points That Indicate Milk Producing Qualities.

In the year book of the Idaho state farmers' institutes C. L. Smith describes an ideal dairy cow thus: She should have a big mouth, thick lip, large nostrils, a smooth dished face, wide forehead; large, prominent eyes; thin on neck and shoulder, but widening down; fore legs wide apart, so wide that one might crawl between them; full chest; sharp back, wedge-like; backbone rather prominent, ribs to start away from the backbone—that is, slant away and have two ribs right over small of barrel, far enough apart so that the open flat hand will go in between them. This is a particularly good indication of a large milker.

The swell of ribs, paunch, should be large, with a heavy muscle running from hip joint diagonally down across the abdomen; cow should be broad on hip and well developed over hip, hind legs well apart, with good show of udder back of them, extending well up, udder also to begin well in front; but discard a cow that has a meaty, fleshy udder, the ideal formation being a circle shape, with the four teats well apart and square on end, and this indicates an easy milker, while where the udder is well quartered up and the teats are big at shoulder and pointed it denotes a hard milker.

The vein that runs from the udder to the heart should be large. If this vein is small and straight, look out. On the contrary, if big and crooked, it indicates a heavy milker. Notwithstanding all these "good signs" the final test is the milk pail and the Babcock test, because there are exceptions to all rules.

Mottles In Butter.

During the fall and winter we more frequently hear complaints of mottles in butter. This may in a measure be due to too low churning temperature, says C. Larsen in Creamery Journal. At a low churning temperature in a cool room the butter usually comes in a firm condition. In such a condition butter takes salt with difficulty. It is essential to work it more in order to get the salt evenly distributed and dissolved. Such an excessive amount of working while butter is in a hard condition causes an undue amount of water to be expressed, thus making the condition for dissolving sufficient salt more unfavorable, besides lessening the overrun without improving its commercial value.

Facts About Dairy Cattle.

There are vast differences in the efficiency and profit derived from individual dairy cows. One cow may produce more than twice as much butter fat in a year as another on exactly the same feed. A good cow well cared for may produce five times as much as the average cow.

Nearly all dairymen keep a portion of their herd at an actual loss.

Many keep cows that pay only half as much a bushel for the grain consumed as other cows in the same herd.

The Milk Machine.

The cow is a machine for the manufacture of milk and butter, and the stomach is the best and only laboratory in the world for the purpose.

THE BUTTERMAKER

The best churning temperature can only be determined by trial and careful observation, says L. W. Lighty in National Stockman. It may vary from 52 to 64 degrees. The nature of the milk, the size of the butter globules, the feed the cows eat and many other factors will determine the churning temperature. Ripen the cream properly and try, say, 56 degrees. The butter should not come in less than thirty to forty-five minutes churning, and when it comes the granules should be fairly firm, so they will not readily coalesce or smash together. If the temperature is too high the little granules will not keep their shape and it is impossible to wash out the buttermilk, and in our attempt to work it out we ruin the grain of the butter and the butter will retain too large a per cent of moisture and will go off flavor quickly. It is generally a good rule to churn at as low a temperature as is possible to get the butter within one hour's churning where the churn is not overfilled.

Churning and Working.

In the churning, washing and working of butter considerable good sense and skill are required. The cream should be brought to such a temperature that it will churn in a reasonable length of time—from forty-five to sixty minutes—producing granules about the size of wheat grains and more or less irregular in form. The buttermilk can be readily washed from such butter, and this will add very materially to its keeping quality; also such butter, being firm, will likely, when worked, be close and possess a good grain and body.

Care of Milk Vessels.

There are some things about washing vessels which come in contact with milk that the average housewife needs to learn. The dishcloth as found in the average kitchen should never be used on dairy utensils. It is the exception where one will be found to smell sweet an hour after it has been used, and yet milk utensils are often washed with it and wiped with a towel that has done duty on all of the china and glassware of the household and possibly the pots and kettles before the tinware of the separator is touched.

Care of Milk.

Warm milk from the cow does not absorb odors. While cooling keep it in a pure atmosphere.

Heating the Cream.

Adding hot water to cream while churning is the worst of all practices.

RAISING THE CALF.

When Properly Done It Is a Money Making Operation.

The market value of a cow raised on the farm does not represent the whole profit of the operation, says a correspondent of American Cultivator. The home raised cow if properly cared for is likely to give better satisfaction than one which has come out by chance and which has been sold by its owner for some good reason, but I reckon that calf raising is also a fairly good money making operation. I estimate the value of the young calf fit to raise at $4, milk for ten days $2.50, oilmeal and other grains $2.50, hay $1.25, grass six to eight months $7.50, calf meal for four months $4, labor $1.25, total about $25, bringing the calf to a year of age, at which time, if she is of the proper stock, the value should be about $30, leaving a clear margin of about $5 profit.

My calves are weaned at four months old, having used up to that time about $4 worth of milk. Some calves would, of course, be worth more at twelve months old, but none of proper stock and breeding should be worth less than the amount I have stated.

Calf raising gives no more trouble and costs no more than production of other farm specialties. It requires, say, four months' careful attention on the part of somebody, but the final results repay all the bother attending the early stages.

The Silo a Money Saver.

"With very many farmers," says Professor Beal, who compiles most of the farm experiment bulletins of the department of agriculture, "cornstalks form a large part of the roughage fed to stock during the winter, and the greater portion of the stalk below the ear is wasted. In an experiment at the New Jersey station it was found that of 200 pounds of stalks fed to a cow during ten days sixty pounds, or 30 per cent, remained uneaten.

"Shredding would no doubt result in more complete consumption of the stalks, and, according to the New Jersey station, 'at least five-sixths of the 30 per cent waste in the experiments could be prevented by using a well built silo; besides, 12 per cent more milk could be produced from the silage than from the dried stalks.'"

Temperature For Churning.

The churning temperature for cream with a Babcock test of 30 per cent will vary between 50 and 55 degrees. Thin cream will require to be churned at a higher temperature. Churning at too high a temperature means quick churning, a loss of fat in the buttermilk, lumpy butter that will not wash properly and greasy butter, with a poor grain and body. On the other hand, churning at too low a temperature means a great loss of time and either very fine or smooth, rounded granules and is not to be recommended.

The Dairy Calf.

Although good cows can be found in all communities they are comparatively scarce, and the heifer calves from them should certainly be raised. Where the whole milk is disposed of and no skim milk is available this is not so easily done, but it will pay to feed the best calves whole milk for a few days and then gradually substitute some other calf food. In this way, if a little care is exercised, excellent dairy calves may be raised on a small quantity of milk.

FEEDING FOR MILK

Chemical analysis and digestion experiments indicate but very little difference in the nutritive values of the linseed oil meal and cottonseed meal, but American experience tends to show that the former may be safely fed with greater liberality than the latter and continued for a longer term, says Hoard's Dairyman. Heavy feeding of cottonseed meal to steers can be safely continued for not more than two or three months, and for milk cows, especially where highest quality of product is required, we consider two pounds per day about the limit.

Cabbage For Cows.

I feed cabbage every year to my cows. We sell the butter to our neighbors, and we never have had any fault found. I always feed right after milking and never before. I should judge that I feed fifteen or twenty pounds apiece at a time with any kind of grain or without any grain. This makes splendid feed. Cows give lots of milk on it. We use the milk on the table and never see any difference in it.—Cor. Rural New Yorker.

Feeding the Sire.

Money and time spent in finding an excellent sire will prove a remunerative investment even to the average dairyman if he will stick to one breed.

The Ignorant Feeder.

Many a good cow, individually capable of high production, is rendered almost useless because her owner has not applied himself to the problem of feeds and feeding, does not know how to feed her and has no idea of the composition of milk and cow feeds.—Holstein-Friesian Register.

Shredder and Silo.

The shredder and the silo are two implements which are coming more and more to be recognized as money producers on the farm.

Silage Versus Grain.

Experiments conducted at the Ohio station seem to justify the conclusion that silage can be made to take the place of a considerable portion of the grain ration. It is believed that by growing more of the feeds rich in protein—clover, alfalfa, soy beans, cowpeas, field peas and vetches—and ensiloing them, or feeding them as hay, it will be possible to further reduce the amount of grain fed.

THE DAIRY SIRE.

Importance of Good Blood In Building Up the Herd.

After a fair trial all mature cows that do not come up to a profitable standard should be disposed of at once. A heifer may not do well with her first calf, but if she is a promising individual in other respects she should still be retained. If, however, she is a poor producer during her second lactation period, she should be kept no longer.

After the cows have been tested for a year and the best ones determined, these should be bred to a sire of some dairy breed, one that is both an excellent individual and whose female ancestors have for several generations been large producers. In no class of animals is the pedigree of so much importance as in the dairy sire. In others something can be told of the sire's individual merit for the purpose for which he is kept. The speed stallion can be tested on the track, the wool ram by examining his fleece and all flesh producing animals by the development of high priced portions of their bodies, while the ability of the dairy bull to produce good milkers must be determined almost entirely by the record of his ancestors.

Again, in no class of animals do we have the opportunity to determine the individual merit of the females from a standpoint of production so well as in dairy cattle. An exact record of the yield for the entire year may be easily kept and the animal's actual worth be determined while still comparatively young and without destroying the animals, as is necessary for the block test. The old saying that "the sire is half the herd" does not always express the whole truth. In a sire whose ancestors have been bred for dairy purposes only these characteristics have become firmly fixed and when crossed on cows of no special breeding will produce calves more like the sire than the dam. In this case the sire counts for more than half. A dairyman may start with nothing but the grade cows of only fair quality and by simply purchasing dairy sires of excellent quality have a fine grade dairy herd in a few years. Too much stress cannot be laid on this point, and money and time spent in finding an excellent sire will prove a remunerative investment. — Professor Fraser of Illinois Agricultural College.

Dairy Profits Show Quickly.

Those engaged in dairying as a rule are prosperous. There are a host of reasons for this. The prime one is that it is a cash business. You feed your cow today and get your returns tomorrow. The dairyman does not have to wait until after the harvest to pay his hired man. He has his cash at the end of every month. He need not run a bill at the store. He is engaged in a cash business and can pay as he goes. This is one of the foundation principles of prosperity.—Farmers Advocate.

Test the Cow's Milk.

There are many ways to test the richness of a cow's milk besides the churn, and the matter of testing should never be neglected.

Influence of Food on Cows.

Rich food will decrease the quantity of milk, but will increase the quantity of butter.

Kind Treatment Pays.

Milk and feed regularly, and with kind treatment the cows are certain to respond.

Hints For Milk Farmers

Hand separator cream needs to be kept as carefully as any other kind of cream. Progress in this has been made but slowly since the introduction of the gathered cream system, or indeed since the introduction of the hand separator. Considering the small volume of gathered cream compared with the whole milk system, there seems little reason in every farmer not having a perfect arrangement for keeping it. But it must be acknowledged that so far as we are able to learn by far the greater part of the cream from hand separators is still kept in cellars with vegetables and all kinds of things that have an odor that is not an addition to the flavor of the cream.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Give the Cow a Chance.

Kind and considerate treatment goes a good way in getting the best results from the boy or hired man. Try it on your cows.

The Good Cow.

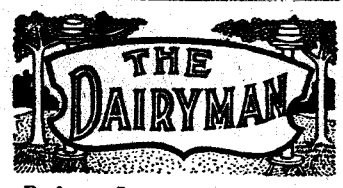
The good cow is cheap at a big price, and the poor cow is dear at a very low price. Test the milk from each cow, and do not let a cow that is only worthy of a place as a beef animal work you.

Keep Milk Clean.

This is the time in the year when farmers, not realizing the danger, allow the milk to stand in unclean stables, where it takes up objectionable odors that may be present. The result is tainted milk and a deterioration in the quality of butter.

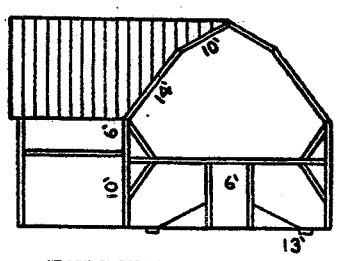
Sampling Milk.

The weighing and testing of one mess of milk are of no value, but the milk should be weighed and sampled several consecutive milkings if a true average production of the cow is to be obtained. —Hoard's Dairyman.



When to Cut Hay.

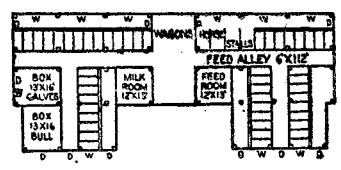
All grasses designed for hay should be cut when in that stage of growth that contains the most protein. With timothy clover, redtop, blue grass, orchard grass and alfalfa, that means just before or at the beginning of the blossoming stage. One pound of hay made at this stage and cured rightly is worth two pounds for milk making or the growth of young animals of ordinary hay.



LEGAL NOTICES.

Notice to Creditors.

In pursuance of an order of Sheldon B. Mead, Surrogate of the county of Oswego, New York, notice is hereby given according to law, to all persons having claims against Andrus G. Morse, late of the Town of Volney in said County, deceased, that they are required to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber at her residence in the Town of Volney, in the County of Oswego, New York, on or before the 15th day of April, 1905.
Dated this 10th day of October, A. D., 1904.
MARGARET L. MORSE,
Executrix.



Professor Joseph E. Wing, replying to a request for plans to build in Idaho a dairy barn to contain forty cows and some heifers, with pen for calves and place for bull and stalls for four horses, says in Breeder's Gazette: In the request the demand was made that there must be space for two delivery wagons and a room for cooling the milk, besides a feed room which may be supplied from bins in the loft. The inquirers favor a three story barn, but, finding labor expensive, desire the building to be so convenient as to require few men to do the work. They wish storage for about a hundred tons of hay and two cars of ground feed.

CROSS SECTION OF DAIRY BARN.

I do not think the three story barn what they need and have accordingly designed a simple stable 32 feet wide, 112 feet long, with two wings each 16 by 32. This gives accommodation for forty cows, nine heifers, the four horses, the bull in a fine box and a box for calves, which, however, should be kept mostly in another building. The wagons will be kept in the central driveway, the cooling room to one side of it and the feed room to the other side, each being near to the center of the barn. A track and carrier should go down the central aisle, with switches to the wings, carrying feed wherever it is desired, and a similar track with carrier behind the cattle will remove rapidly and cleanly all the manure.

Over the driveway and feed room will be great bins for the ground feed, which can be cheaply elevated by horsepower, either in sack or in a mill elevator. If it is bought sacked it should be elevated in the sack and emptied in the bins. Hay may be taken in at the driveway and at the ends and thrown down in the feed alleys at convenient points. The framework should be of joist construction, no part heavier than 2 by 12 inches being needed, with self supporting roof. If at any time it is desired to extend the accommodations the wings may be lengthened one or more bents without in any way affecting the workings of the barn. There would thus be constructed a fine sheltered court where cattle might sun themselves and drink.

Dehorning Calves.

Clip the hair from the top of the horn when the calf is from two to five days old, slightly moisten the end of a stick of caustic potash (which can be obtained from any chemist) and with it rub the tip of each horn firmly for about a quarter of a minute or until the potash has made a slight impression on the center of the horn. It is suggested that the horn should be treated in a similar manner from two to four times, according to the size of the horn and the age of the animal. About five minutes should elapse between each application, and if after one or more applications a little blood appears in the center of the horn it will then only be necessary to give another very slight rubbing with the potash. It is necessary for the operator to roll the potash stick in paper to protect his fingers and to be careful to see that none of the potash reaches the skin surrounding the horn. It is essential also that the calves should not be exposed to rain for some days after the horns are dressed. — American Cultivator.

The Separator.

There are some advantages to the farmer in the use of the separator. The chief one is the quality of his skim milk. It is not watered, it does not carry the disease germs from other herds, it can be fed an hour or so after it is drawn and is in the best possible feeding condition, not being contaminated by the average creamery skim milk vat. The bulk that has to be handled, cared for and taken to the creamery is reduced 85 per cent. The separator removes many bacteria, and if the cream is cooled down to 40 degrees or below it will keep in a better condition longer than milk, saving some trips to the creamery where a man has to haul it himself.—National Stockman.

KIDNEY DISEASE CURED

A Typical Letter to Dr. David Kennedy's Son About Dr. Kennedy's NEW Medicine, Cal-cura Solvent.

Gilbert F. Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., makes public the following letter from one of the most prominent men in Utica, N. Y., but who does not wish his name used publicly:

My Dear Sir: I received a sample bottle of Dr. Kennedy's new medicine, Cal-cura Solvent, a few months ago. I was greatly pleased with it, and decided to try a large bottle. I therefore purchased three bottles of Mr. Sheehan, and I am pleased to inform you that I have been greatly benefited by it and consider myself cured. If my kidney trouble ever asserts itself again (and I am sure it will not) I will not hesitate to continue the use of this grand medicine. I wish you would send some samples to the parties on the enclosed list. All are suffering from kidney trouble. Yours very truly,

The Hawaiian Death Prayer.

Upon the minds of such a people as the Hawaiians were, while under their ancient form of religion, it was but natural that superstition should gain a rooted hold. The most curious and effective belief to which they were made subject was that a man can be prayed to death, a belief that survives among the natives to the present day. For the success of the tragical death prayer it was necessary to obtain some hair or a piece of finger nail of the intended victim. A priest was then employed to use incantation and prayer for his destruction. Always informed of the doom that the priest was invoking upon him, the victim generally pined away and died.

There is a story that an Englishman in the service of Kamehameha I. having incurred the displeasure of a priest, the latter proceeded to "remove" him by the death prayer process. The Anglo-Saxon, however, set up an opposition altar in derision and jokingly proclaimed that he intended to pray the priest to death. Alarmed at the threat and overwhelmed at the failure of his own incantations, the sorcerer died, proving by his death his faith in his religion.

The Violet In Mythology.

"Violets," says N. Hudson Moore in his "Flower Fables and Fancies," "occupy a conspicuous place in Greek mythology. We are told that Io was beloved by Jupiter, who, on account of Juno's jealousy, changed her into a heifer. Such common food as grass was far too gross to serve as nourishment for the sweetheart of one of the gods. Therefore as something wonderfully delicious he created the violet that Io might feed upon its fragrant petals." The Greek name of the flower is Ion, and the Greek adopted it as their national emblem. The Romans also extolled this emblem of modesty and it was the favorite flower of Mohammed. Besides being the emblem of humility, the violet is held to signify love of truth.

Four flowers only, Mr. Moore reminds us, have entered into politics—the rose in England, the lily in France and the chrysanthemum in Japan. The fourth is the violet, which was more closely associated with one man than with the country. The violet is ever reminiscent of Napoleon the Great, whose emblem it became.

How Sarasata Taught Singing.

"I was in South America once years ago as a young man, and I was stranded after a very unsuccessful tour in a city there. 'Teach,' said somebody 'and you will easily earn enough to pay your debts, such as they are.' But, alas, nobody wanted to learn the violin.

"'Never mind,' said my enterprising acquaintance, who was genuinely sorry for my plight and wanted to help me, 'teach singing.' Here was another difficulty. I never had as much voice as a crow and knew nothing about singing. But 'needs must'—I need not finish the proverb. My pupil, a lady, came, and I played my violin to her. 'There,' I said, with all the assurance of the most fashionable voice producer, 'sing like that. That is the way to sing.' She was amazed, but I honestly believe she learned more from my tone and phrasing than if I had taught her scales and songs."—London Express.

A Conscientious Jury.

On one occasion a native in Kaii, Hawaii, cheated a neighbor out of a small sum of money. The community was indignant and determined that the guilty party should be punished. The day of the trial came, the testimony was conclusive, the judge closed his charge, reminding the jury that "it takes nine to convict," for a three-fourths majority was required instead of a unanimous jury. It was thought that the twelve might decide in the box, but the Hawaiian likes form, and they gravely withdrew to the jury room. They were gone an unconscionable time. At length the judge, impatient, sent to find out what in the world was the matter and discovered this predicament: All twelve were for conviction, and no three could be induced to vote for the defendant.

Her Pious Wish.

Robert Burns' friend, Dr. Blacklock, the blind poet, was a licentiate of the Church of Scotland and used to preach occasionally.

One Sunday he was supplying a country pulpit. Certain deaf old women, as was the custom in those days, had squatted on the pulpit stairs to be as near the preacher as possible. Like the mass of the Scottish people, they abominated sermons that were read.

One of them as soon as the discourse was begun said to her neighbor in a tone that was audible through the whole church, "Is he readin'?"

"Tuts, woman! No, he canna read He's blind."

"Blin, is he, eh? That's raal fortnate. I wish they were a' blind."

Drinking Water.

Our physical well being would be greatly increased if we would drink a large glass of water immediately on arising and again on retiring. The morning glass may be of hot water to advantage. Then take another large glassful between breakfast and dinner and another between dinner and supper. Encourage the water drinking habit in the children as well as in yourself, for thereby the eliminating processes of the body are satisfactorily carried on.

Male and Female Buyers.

Whereas some women will go into a fast establishment intent on spending a certain sum—say, on an article of dress—and will successively scrutinize half a dozen things besides what she originally wanted and retire without buying any, a man will stray in without any fixed plan of purchase and will sometimes purchase large quantities of goods that he never dreamed of wanting when he entered the shop.—London Truth.

A Mean Retort.

"If you don't stop talking," cautioned the husband, "I'll not be able to catch any fish." "That's funny," answered the wife. "When a girl angles for a husband she has to talk a great deal." "I know. But there's a difference between fish and lobsters."

The Smart Student.

"Every year," said the professor, "a sheet of water fourteen feet thick is raised to the clouds from the sea."

"What time of the year does that happen, professor?" asked the freshman. "I should think it would be a sight worth going to see."

The Poison of Dishonesty.

It is astonishing how men will play with the poison of dishonesty, which is so insidious at first, which intoxicates and stimulates one, but paralyzes and kills later. If every youth were only taught that to be successful a man must be greater than his occupation, that his character must not be for sale at any price, that he will always be rich so long as he retains it and just in proportion to its strength and integrity, and weak and unhappy and a failure, no matter how much money he may have, just in proportion to the weakness of his character; if he only started out with the conviction that only one real failure is possible, and that is the loss of self respect, the barter of one's character, either for pleasure or for money; if the youth were only taught that he cannot afford to deceive even a little bit in the quality of goods he is selling or in the quality of the service he is giving, what a revolution would come to our civilization!—Success.

The Soul of the Tailor.

The soul of the craftsman can express itself more fully and clearly in tailoring than in any other trade. If the tailor's thoughts are poetic, he can issue pastorals in colors that are charmingly suggestive of hillside or meadow, foliage or waving grain. He can make his overcoats speak of bleak December, his dress suits of frolic and festivities, his frock coats of dignity and wealth, his cutaways of self content and his sacks of strenuousness, and he can make his waistcoats jingle like limericks, his trousers sing of sunshine or of rain and mud, his spring suits chortle of hope and joy and his summer suits prattle of flowers. If he is an artist, he can make overcoat, undercoat, waistcoat or trousers seem a sensuous haze, a reverie in color, a riot of action or a vigorous portrayal of conflicting emotions in a decimated field of desolation, and if he is a musician he can impart to his sartorial creations an expression that suggests the bleating of a lamb, the clashing of cymbals, the rattat of a drum, the ragtime movement of a cakewalk, the wail of despair, the shout of triumph, the roar of a lion or the bray of an ass. —Sartorial Art Journal.

Afraid of Strong Medicines.

Many people suffer for years from rheumatic pains, and prefer to do so rather than take the strong medicines usually given for rheumatism, not knowing that quick relief from pain may be had simply by applying Chamberlain's Pain Balm and without taking any medicine internally. Rev. Amos Parker of Magnolia, North Carolina, suffered for eight years with a lame hip, due to severe rheumatic pains. He has been permanently cured by the free application of Chamberlains pain Balm for sale by H. C. Giesler.

Position In Sleep.

According to Dr. Fischer of Berlin, the most effective position of sleep for obtaining intellectual rest is to keep the head low and the feet slightly elevated. Failing this, the body should at any rate be horizontal, so as to irrigate the brain well. The habit of sleeping with head low and feet high is, according to the doctor, a remedy for brain troubles and some internal maladies. It can be adopted gradually.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy the Mother's Favorite

The soothing and healing properties of this remedy, its pleasant taste and prompt and permanent cures have made it a favorite with people everywhere. It is especially prized by mothers of small children, for colds, croup and whooping cough, as it always affords quick relief, and as it contains no opium or other harmful drug, it may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. Could Be Happy if We Wished.

If in a less fortunate time than ours, when the resources of mind and body were less varied and plentiful than they are now, men and women took delight in life, warmed both hands at its fire and filled their hearts with joy and gladness, may we not conclude that they were happy simply because they lived, as we might, in the right way and put to their right uses that which was provided for them?—Christian Register.

Many smokers are probably unaware that a part of the fragrance of Havana cigars is imparted by the wrappings called "yaguas" in which they are rolled. So highly are yaguas esteemed that a Cuban law prohibits the exportation of them.

A Reserved Hour.

The whole of the day should not be daytime nor of the night nighttime, but some portion be rescued from time to oversee time in. All our hours must not be current; all our time must not lapse. There must be one hour at least which the day did not bring forth, of ancient parentage and long established nobility, which will be a serene and lofty platform overlooking the rest. We should make our notch every day on our characters, as Robinson Crusoe on his stick. We must be at the helm at least once a day. We must feel the tiller rope in our hands and know that if we sail we steer.—H. D. Thoreau in Atlantic.

Ill Luck Averted.

"My dear," said Mrs. Spenders by way of preliminary, "would you consider an opal unlucky?"

"I would if I got a bill for one and had to pay it," began her husband sternly.

"Oh," she interrupted, "I'm so glad I ordered a diamond instead!"—Catholic Standard and Times.

THIRTY MEN RESCUED.

Taken From Ice Breaker That Was Wedged In Floes.

LARGE HOLE STOVE IN HER HULL.

One by One the Men Were Hauled Onto Tugs—Ice Jam Prevented the Tugs From Landing, and the Men Made a Perilous Journey Afoot Over the Ice Fields.

Lewes, Del., Feb. 6.—Thirty men narrowly escaped drowning Sunday in the icy waters of the Harbor of Refuge at the Delaware breakwater and after being rescued with the greatest difficulty by the crews of two tugs they were forced to make their way to shore afoot over the heavy ice floes. The men were Captain Jacobs and his crew of 29 men of the Philadelphia city ice boat No. 3, which made its way down the river from Philadelphia in an effort to make channels for vessels icebound at the breakwater.

The iceboat had become wedged in the mass of ice between the harbor of refuge and the breakwater, and, unable to proceed, was being carried hither and thither by the motion of the pack. While drifting in this manner the iceboat struck the sunken barge Santiago and a large hole was stove in her hull.

Immediately the boat began to fill. Captain Jacobs' signals of distress were answered by the tugs Teaser and Boxer, which had much difficulty in reaching the rapidly sinking iceboat, their passage being hampered by heavy cakes of ice. They succeeded, however, in drawing near enough to throw a line to the sinking boat and one by one the crew were hauled aboard the tugs.

The ice jam prevented the tugs from docking and the crew of the iceboat, stiff from exposure and nearly exhausted, managed to complete a perilous journey afoot across the ice fields to shore. The iceboat sank soon after the crew was taken off.

Navigation is almost at a standstill on the Delaware because of the ice which is jamming the stream from Trenton, N. J., to the breakwater and extends nearly 10 miles out to sea. There is a large fleet of vessels at the breakwater unable to make any headway against the jam.

ICE EMBARGO IN NEW ENGLAND.

Island of Nantucket Is Cut Off From the Outside World.

Boston, Feb. 6.—The New England coast south of Cape Cod is tight in the grasp of one of the most extensive ice embargoes of recent winters. While in Boston harbor the only inconvenience was caused by floating ice, south of the cape conditions were far different, Nantucket sound being almost completely closed over, while Vineyard sound was filled with ice.

The island of Nantucket is cut off from the outside world and until the embargo is lifted there is little probability of a steamer being able to proceed to Wood's Hole.

At Vineyard Haven the harbor was frozen over and vast fields of ice extended for miles out into Vineyard sound.

Buzzard's bay is frozen over, practically all the way from the Elizabeth Islands to New Bedford. A government lightship in attempting to proceed from New Bedford to her station on Nantucket shoals was caught in the ice off Mishaum Point and held fast.

Narragansett bay is full of ice, and at Newport the harbor is frozen over and shipping is practically at a standstill.

Funerals Had to Be Postponed.

Columbia, S. C., Feb. 6.—The unusual spectacle of men drawing a hearse containing a corpse was witnessed here. This was made necessary by a sleet storm which has prevailed for 24 hours, making it almost impossible for horses to keep their footing. After several futile attempts to draw the hearse with horses, 60 negroes, members of fraternal orders to which the dead man had belonged, procured ropes which they fastened to the hearse, thus carrying the body to the cemetery, a distance of over two miles. Three funerals which were to have taken place were postponed on account of the icy condition of the streets.

Lowest Temperature of the Winter.

Saratoga, Feb. 6.—The thermometer here Sunday registered as low as 18 degrees below zero. In outlying towns the temperature of 20 to 22 below was reported.

Binghamton, Feb. 6.—From 6 to 8 o'clock Sunday morning the official thermometer here registered 14 degrees below zero, the coldest by 6 degrees this winter. Towards noon and all afternoon the weather moderated and at night a blizzard was raging.

Poughkeepsie, Feb. 6.—The mercury went as low as 10 below zero here Sunday morning. At Vassar college the thermometer registered 15 degrees below.

CONGRESSIONAL PROGRAM.

Electoral Vote to Be Canvassed Wednesday—Railroad Rate Legislation.

Washington, Feb. 6.—The senate has laid out an extended program for this week. Monday and Tuesday will be given over largely to the statehood bill, and a vote will be taken on Tuesday. The contest over some of the amendments to the bill will be sharp and may continue the session into the night.

On Monday the statehood bill will be displaced temporarily in order to permit the managers of the Swayne impeachment trial to present the replication of the house of representatives to Judge Swayne's answer in the proceedings against him, but it is not expected that they will consume much time.

Wednesday the senate will proceed to the hall of the house of representatives and assist in canvassing the electoral vote.

Appropriation bills will occupy the balance of the time during the week. The Republican steering committee has decided that the pure food bill shall become the unfinished business after the disposal of the statehood bill.

The agricultural appropriation bill will be discussed as opportunity offers and it is expected that by the time it is out of the way the District of Columbia and the Indian appropriation bills will be ready for consideration.

Railroad rate legislation is to have the right of way in the house the first three days of the week. The rule making the bill giving the interstate commerce commission power to fix rates a special order during sessions which are to begin an hour earlier than usual on Tuesday and Wednesday will be the subject of lively debate on Monday.

Opposition to the bill which has been agreed on by the Republicans of the committee on interstate commerce will be voiced in the debate on this rule. This opposition may come from the minority developed in the Republican conference Friday as well as from the Democrats of the house.

If the two should unite to defeat the rule, those who have counted noses say this could be accomplished. Should the rule be adopted, there will be no opportunity to amend the bill. The Democrats will be given an opportunity to make their showing of strength on the Davey bill, to be offered as a substitute for the Esch-Townsend bill, when the time comes to vote on that measure at 4 o'clock Wednesday.

The discussion will be interrupted on Wednesday to permit the two houses of congress to assemble in the hall of the house and count the electoral vote for president and vice president.

This ceremony will begin promptly at 1 o'clock. President pro tempore Frye of the senate will occupy a seat beside Speaker Cannon and preside over the joint session, and the senators will be seated in reserve places on the floor of the house. Tellers representing both houses and both political parties have been appointed and will review and announce the vote. After the announcement of the result the railroad rate debate will continue.

The balance of the week will be devoted to consideration of the naval and river and harbor appropriation bills.

PRESIDENT BECKWITH DEAD.

Deceased Would Have Been Principal Witness Against Mrs. Chadwick.

Oberlin, O., Feb. 6.—C. T. Beckwith, president of the defunct Citizens' National bank of this city, died at 10:45 o'clock last night after two days of unconsciousness, during which dissolution was expected at any moment. Death resulted directly from heart trouble. Mr. Beckwith was about 65 years old. On Dec. 14 last the federal grand jury in Cleveland returned five indictments against Beckwith upon the charge of violating the national banking laws in connection with the loans made to Mrs. Cassie L. Chadwick by the Citizens' National bank of Oberlin, of which deceased was the president.

From the day of his arrest Beckwith's health failed rapidly, as a result of worry over his troubles. He frequently declared during his illness that he wanted to die. For several days prior to his death he refused to take food in any form.

The death of President Beckwith may materially weaken the cases of forgery and conspiracy to misapply bank funds, now charged against Mrs. Chadwick. It was expected that Beckwith would be the star witness in both federal and common pleas courts.

There is no way to perpetuate Beckwith's testimony. The constitution of the United States says an accused person must be confronted in court by the accusers. A deposition or affidavit cannot be used.

An effort was made to communicate the information of the death of the banker to Mrs. Chadwick, but the jail authorities refused to permit it.

Cossacks Drove Back Strikers.

Sosnovice, Feb. 6.—Strikers to the number of 15,000 Sunday marched from Dombrovo t othis place and attempted to reach the Warsaw station, but Cossacks drove them back without using their weapons.

The strike movement in Poland has spread to the governments of Warsaw, Petrikau, Kalisz, Radom, Lublin and Suvalki. Martial law has been declared in Kalisz, Radom and Siedlce.

AMATEUR CRACKSMAN

Story of a Man Who Says He Plundered For Pleasure.

DID MANY JOBS IN RESIDENCES.

Says He Tried to Emulate Stories of Western Bandits — Character of "Raffles" Also Was an Inspiration to Him—Amused Himself Telephoning to His Victims.

New York, Feb. 6.— Christopher Smyth, or "Sandrock," who is locked up at police headquarters, charged with being the perpetrator of many startling robberies in private residences within the past few weeks, made a confession to Acting Inspector O'Brien of the detective bureau, according to a statement made by O'Brien.

Smyth declared that he had not worked for plunder but merely for the enjoyment he got out of the excitement incident to the robberies. He confessed that he had been interested in the exploits of Western bandits and that he had tried to emulate their example.

The character of "Raffles," he declared, had also given him ideas and he had attempted to follow out this example. He vowed that it would have been the easiest thing in the world for the police to have captured him on various occasions, but that there had been no attempt made to follow him after he had left the houses he entered, except in one instance.

He declared confidently that in several instances he could have secured diamonds and other jewels had he so chosen and was sure that he could have gone to any bank in the city and obtained whatever he demanded.

One of the crimes imputed to him, that of entering the house of General Anson G. McCook when the general's young son fired at the burglar, he declared he was innocent of. Of his dexterity with weapons, he boasted that he could hit a 50-cent piece at 50 yards 99 times out of 100.

Smyth denied absolutely that he has had any confederates and declares that he has been working alone. Besides the $85 he got from E. G. Woerz, he netted all told one dollar from the hall attendant at the Delta Phi club and $35 from pawning Mr. Heighe's watch taken at the same time. He insisted again and again that he had worked not for profit but for the excitement.

Smyth told with great gusto of calling on the telephone an evening paper which had offered a reward of $1,000 for his apprehension. He said: "'Will you pay me the reward if I go down to the office?' I asked them. They wanted to know who I was and I said 'I'm Raffles. I'm the man you want.' They said that they would pay the money if I went down to the office but I never went.

"I telephoned to Mr. Woerz that I was the man that held him up and told him that he need not bother going around trying to identify people who had been arrested. 'He is'nt caught,' I told him, 'and he is'nt going to get caught. You can't get him. But I warn you that if you don't stop all this publicity I'll blow up your house with dynamite. I mean what I say. I will now tell you that I'm the man. Good bye.'

"I also telephoned to the Shipmans. I felt real bad that the girl had been made ill by the fright."

U. Solomon, organizer of the Socialist Democratic party in New York, sent a letter to Police Commissioner McAdoo denying that Smyth had ever been a lecturer for the party or had ever been known to have any affiliations with it.

REVOLUTION CRUSHED.

Many Rioters Killed or Wounded and 250 Arrested.

Buenos Ayres, Feb. 6.—In the course of attacks upon police stations Saturday morning several rioters were killed, about 30 were injured and some 250 arrested. Order has been completely restored and today the city presents a normal aspect.

Ex-President Roca has telegraphed President Quintana offering his services in aid of the restoration of order. The province of Santa Fe is reported tranquil.

With a view to avoiding bloodshed the government has sent a sufficiently large force to Mendoza and Cordoba to easily overpower the few hundreds of revolutionaries. It is hoped the latter will be forced to surrender without fighting. There are 5,000 men marching on these two towns by different routes.

The revolution being practically crushed, the government has annulled the decree calling out the reserves.

All the newspapers here strongly condemn the revolutionary movement.

Work of American Revivalists.

London, Feb. 6.—Rev. Reuben A. Torrey and Charles M. Alexander, the American revivalists, last night had one of the most successful public openings of any revival work in the experience of London. Lord Kinnaird, president of the Evangelical council, expressed himself as delighted with the results. Thousands of people collected outside Albert hall hours before the opening of the meeting. An enormous number were turned away. At the close of the meeting 300 persons made public confession.

The Power of Eloquence.

Speaking about church revivals and the inspired orators that move people to tears and repentence with their eloquence, a lawyer said: "I once listened to a passionate address on charity that one of these inspired orators made, and at the address' end an old lady with whom I was slightly acquainted turned and borrowed $5 from me to put in the poor collection. I let her have the money, and, as it turned out afterward, she forgot both to put it in the plate and to repay it."

Sock and Buskin.

The expression "Sock and buskin," which literally means comedy and tragedy, found its origin in the "soccus," the Latin name of the low shoe worn by the ancient comic actors, and the buskin, a contraction of the French word "brossequin," remotely derived from the Greek "bursa," a hide or high soled shoe worn by the ancient tragedians to increase their height. The soccus reached to the ankle only, whereas the buskin extended to the knee.

Dense.

Queen Victoria was greatly moved on the occasion of the distribution of medals at the close of the Crimean war, but her grief was not apparent to those less sympathetic. "Was the queen touched?" a lady asked Lord Panmure. "Bless my soul, no!" was the reply. "She had a brass railing before her, and no one could touch her!" "I mean was she moved?" the lady continued and was answered: "Moved? She had no occasion to move."

A Matter of Change.

"What a change a woman can make in a man's life!" sighed the very young man.

"Right you are, my boy," sighed the scanty haired man who had been up against the matrimonial game for many years, "and what a lot of change she requires while doing it!"

A Dream With a Moral.

A rich lady dreamed that she went to heaven and there saw a mansion being built. "Whom is that for?" she asked of the guide.

"For your gardener."

"But he lives in the tiniest cottage on earth, with barely room for his family. He might live better if he did not give away so much to the miserably poor folks."

Farther on she saw a tiny cottage being built. "And whom is that for?" she asked.

"That is for you."

"But I have lived in a mansion on earth. I would not know how to live in a cottage."

The words she heard in reply were full of meaning. "The Master Builder is doing his best with the material that is being sent up."

Then she awoke, resolving to lay up treasure in heaven.—Chicago Post.

PUBLIC LIBRARY

Plans for New Building Accepted by Trustees---Contract for Erection of Building Will Be Let This Week.

There has been a slight modification of the plans which were submitted for the new Public Library building, and the Library trustees are now practically unanimous for their approval and acceptance.

President E. R. Redhead stated to a TIMES representative recently that the plans submitted by Prof. Fred Revels of Syracuse, called for the expenditure of more money than was originally intended, necessitating some few minor changes in order to bring the outlay within the appropriation.

"Bids have been received from several contractors," Mr. Redhead stated, "and the contract for the erection of the building will probably be let this week, so that the work will begin as soon as the weather permits."

Mr. Carnegie had been notified by Mr. Redhead that all conditions had been complied with, so far as he knew, and the trustees awaited advice from him regarding the manner and method of paying the sum he so generously offered.

There has been a hearty response on the part of public spirited citizens toward the purchase of the necessary site, and unless some serious obstacle is presented, the building will be erected before the Summer is over and will be an ornamental and useful addition as well as a source of pride, to the residents of Fulton.

Lincoln's Birthday Observed at the Universalist Church.

Last Sunday morning came representing most of the elements of a Northern Winter. But a warm and earnest patriotism was also represented in the personal presence at the Universalist church of a splendid delegation of veterans of the Civil War; Sons of Veterans; ladies associated with these organizations, and members of the order of United American Mechanics. These were there to join with the minister and congregation in paying the tribute of devotion to the memory of Abraham Lincoln. The stacked arms and the American flag gave to the surroundings of the pulpit, that symbol of warfare which suggests the man and the people who loved peace well enough to fight for it. The choir of young girls sang patriotic hymns and the entire audience listened with marked attention to a sermon giving some of the reasons, "Why an American should cherish the memory of the great war president."

Tax on Cigarettes.

State Excise Commissioner P. W. Cullinan has had under consideration for some months the question of a State tax upon sellers of cigarettes, in order to increase the revenues from indirect sources. It was thought that such a tax would raise $509,000 a year. The proposition has not reached even a tentative form as yet.

Basket Ball.

The Fulton High School basketball team won a signal victory from the Cortland Normal five last Friday evening in the City Hall. Both teams were in superb physical condition and the game was fast and skillful from the start to finish. The Normal team was defeated by the High School boys, the score being 29 to 23.

The Walton High School girls and the Fulton girls contested for supremacy on the same evening, resulting in a victory for the visitors by a score of 6 to 4.

Will Rebuild Plant.

A report came from Oswego that the building of the Corn Products Company at Oswego, recently destroyed by fir will be rebuilt at once. Enough progress has been made by the insurance adjusters to assure officials of the come pany that the damage done will not exceed $125,000.

The company has had some plants on which the insurance rates were prohibitive and it was compelled to carry its own risks. The Oswego plant, however, was entirely rebuilt since the fire a year or so ago and like the Chicago plant, which is also now a modern one, complied with all the requirements of the underwriters essential to procure insurance at normal rates.

The company is feeling the lost of the Oswego plant severely. February and March are usually among the heaviest months in the year for business.

BARGE CANAL.

Argument For and Against the Constitutionality of the Act.

A large delegation for and against the Barge Canal proposition was present last Wednesday at Albany, at the hearing before Attorney-General Mayer, when the constitutionality of the measure was attacked by former Secretary of War, Elihu Root.

Attorney John G. Milburn defended the constitutionality of the act.

Associated with Mr. Root on behalf of the petitioners were former Chief Justice Charles H. Andrews, of Syracuse, and Attorney Isaac Platt of Poughkeepsie.

Mr. Milburn has assisting him, Abel E. Blakmire of New York and George Clinton of Buffalo.

Mr. Root raised these five points:

First. The act violates the provisions relating to debt and expenditure found in article seven of the Constitution.

Second. The act violates section four of article seven, in that it does not impose a tax sufficient to pay the interest and principal of the $101,000,000 of bonds which it authorizes to be issued and sold.

Third. The act violates section six of article one of the Constitution which provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

Fourth. The act violates section eight of article seven of the Constitution which prohibits the sale or other disposition of the canals.

Fifth. None of the defects in this act are cured by the submission to the people. There was no Constitutional authority for submitting to the people any part of the law except that which authorized the debt, specified the object, imposed the tax and provided for its collection.

Attorney-General Mayer asked Mr. Root as to the form of the test action that he would bring if such a case was commenced.

Mr Root suggested three forms:

First. An action brought in the name of the people to restrain the Controller from issuing canal bonds.

Second. An action brought in the name of the people to prevent the Superintendent of Public Works awarding the contracts.

Third. The State Engineer might give notice that he was to take a certain piece of private property and the owner might bring an action to restrain the State from taking such property.

COMMON COUNCIL.

$10,000 Worth of West Side Sewer Bonds Sold.

A special meeting of the Common Council was held on Saturday afternoon to receive bids for the $10,000 west side sewer bonds. The following offers were made: $10,159 and accrued interest from Jan. 1, 1905; $10,177 and $10,229 from Isaac W. Sherrill of Poughkeepsie, which was accepted.

City Attorney Mead was instructed by resolution, formulated by Alderman Russell, to take action to recover moneys received by any city official in violation of the city charter.

Major Ferguson, in behalf of Post Schenck, asked for $200 for indigent veterans, which was granted.

The City Clerk was authorized to draw an order on the Chamberlain for $1,030.29 for the east side sewer bonds and interest, and also orders for $2,594.38, the east side share of the bridge bonds and interests and for the west side share of $1,786,91.

The Council voted $20 toward the expenses of the Farmers' Institute to be held here this week. Five hundred dollars was also voted to the library trustees to be used in maintaining the Public Library.

Bills to the amount of $1,022.97 were audited and ordered paid from the poor and general city funds.

James Wakefield, aged 73, while suffering from an attack of acute melancholia, ended his life on Monday morning.

The deceased resided with his daughter, Mrs. Charles Carner on Utica street, and about two years ago suffered a paralytic shock. A suicidal tendency developed, and notwithstanding the vigilance exercised by his relations, committed suicide by hanging in the barn in rear of residence. His absence was noted on the morning stated, a search was instituted by his daughter and the body discovered. Coroner Cusack was notified, and after viewing the remains, issued burial permit.

The funeral services were held from the late home this Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, Rev. S. D. Robinson officiating.

Rowe conducted the services. Interment in Riverside Cemetry.

A Frances Willard Memorial Service—Resolutions Adopted Commending Chief of Police Ross.

The February meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, held at the home of Mrs. John Richards, was of unusual interest. The program—"A Frances Willard Memorial service,"—was under the leadership of Mrs. S. M. Barker, County President, who gave a carefully prepared paper on the "Life of Frances Willard," which was greatly appreciated by the large number present.

These memorial services are observed each year by Unions all over the world in honor of one whose matchless personality won for her the love and esteem of all who knew her.

Resolutions were passed at this meeting expressing the appreciation of the ladies for the efforts of our Chief of Police, William H. Ross, to suppress vice and immortality in our city, and a letter containing the resolution was forwarded to him.

The hostess served tea during the social half hour at the close of the program.

The men of the church are invited to be present at eight o'clock to hear Prof. Root, and after the address refreshments will be served. Some special music is being planned for the occasion.

EQUITABLE LIFE INSURANCE CO.

Effort will be Made to Transfer the Control of the Above Company from the Stockholders to the Assured.

A radical move to transfer the control of the Equitable Life Insurance Society from the stockholders to the assured has been made by President James W. Alexander and fifty principal officers of the stockholders, who have filed a petition with the Board of Directors, urging them to grant the right of policy holders to vote for directors.

A meeting of the directors will be held this Wednesday to consider the petition. The matter was brought to the attention of the directors at the last meeting, when President Alexander made a speech in favor of the proposal. Further consideration was postponed until next Wednesday. The Equitable Life is controlled by stockholders of the corporation and was founded by the late Henry B. Hyde. The capital stock of the corporation amounts to only $100,000, of which $70,000 par value of the stock belongs to James H. Hyde, who is Vice-President.

Mr. Alexander succeeded Mr. Hyde's father in the presidency of the company and has held that office ever since. Mr. Hyde controls the make-up of the Board of Directors and is in the position to have the last say in the policy of the corporation. The immensity of the corporation may be gathered from the forty-fifth annual statement which gives the total assets at $413,958,020 and surplus $80,794,289. When President Alexander retires from the presidency, Mr. Hyde will undoubtedly succeed.

Mr. Hyde is a young man more famous in this city for his social than for his business activity. He is a graduate of Harvard, of 1898, and his name figures daily in social events. A few nights ago Mr. Hyde gave an Eighteenth Century costume ball at Sherry's, which has been the most talked of the event of this year.

Officers and agents of the society have heard at various times various rumors from many stockholders that Mr. Hyde is a very young man to have the final word in the investment of $400,000,000. The Board of Directors of the Equitable Society is one of the strongest and most representative Board of Directors that could be gathered together in New York.

The officers of the society, with but few exceptions, are strongly of the opinion that the time has come when one man power should be changed and the policy holders be permitted to have a voice in the choosing of a manager.

None of the officers would discuss the proposal today. Mr. Hyde has been offered $5,000,000 for his $70,000 par value holdings in the society. He is said to have asked $7,000,000 for his stock.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Mr and Mrs. Pentelow Enjoying Gentle and Refreshing Showers of Rain—Climate Salubrious.

A recent letter from Mr. W. J. Pentelow, who is at Corona, California, conveys the information that they are enjoying refreshing showers of rain, which falls noiselessly, resuscitating vegetation so that it is green and fresh, the climate at this season being similar to that enjoyed by Fultonians in June. "It seems marvelous," Mr. Pentelow states "that at least 8 inches of rain has fallen so far this Winter, against 50-100 of an inch last season. Have planted all my shrubs and there is no trouble about their growing. The hyacinths are now in blossom, the tulips will soon be in flower, as the buds are almost ready to open. In the valley which we recently crossed in going to Pomona and Ontario there are 11,000 acres of grain planted and more is being put in. The scenery is lovely and certainly the climate is enjoyable and salubrious.

EDITOR TIMES: Allow me, with others, to extend thanks to your genial correspondent at Corona, California, Mr. W. J. Pentelow, for a generous supply of fine, juicy oranges, the first picking from his trees. The soil and climate of that State must be well adapted to this fruit, as the trees were set out by Mr. Pentelow a little more than a year ago. He found upon his return to California that during his absence in this section the trees had grown more than six feet. It would be impossible, of course, in any other section outside of "the orange belt" to grow such fruit in such a short time. All California rejoices over the copious rains which have fallen since Jan. 1, as they insure abundant crops of fruit and grain over the entire State.

SPANISH WAR VETERANS.

Progress of Bill Introduced by Assemblyman T. D. Lewis.

The Assembly Committee on General Laws has just reported the bill of Assemblyman Lewis, amending the Poor law so as to grant to Spanish War veterans, through G. A. R. Posts, the relief now afforded by cities and towns to Civil War veterans.

Elmira Advertiser: "Assemblyman Lewis of Oswego County, has introduced a bill in the Legislature to amend the Poor law relating to the relief of soldiers, sailors and their families, which, it seems to the Advertiser, should be enacted. It puts veterans of the Spanish War on the same footing with the veterans of the Civil War, and there is no good reason why they should not be so. It provides that relief may be extended to poor or indigent soldiers or sailors, through the camps of the United Spanish War Veterans, the same as aid is now given through the posts of the Grand Army to needy members of that body. The amendment is now with the Committee on General Laws. The Legislature cannot, in justice to those who volunteered for service in the Spanish War seven years ago, refuse to enact this measure.

Lot Fuller is Dead.

Lot Fuller, of Caughdenoy, who was shot by Jerome Daniels at the farm of Lewis Shraeder at Central Square on Feb. 2, is dead. Fuller and Daniels were helping Mr. Shraeder to press hay. After dinner on Thursday, Feb. 2, they went into the barn, where Daniels picked up a shotgun, not supposing it was loaded, and fired point blank at Fuller, the shot penetrating the latter's lungs.

Fuller was carried into the farmhouse and everything possible done for him. Doctor Wilcox attended him daily and for a few days had slight hope that he would recover, despite the fact that his injuries were regarded by many as fatal. Fuller was twenty-five years old and is survived by his father, mother, three brothers and a sister.

OSWEGO BONDING BILL

Senator Grady Secures a Reconsideration of Vote.

Senator Grady, the Democratic leader, has secured a reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate recently passed Assemblyman Whitney's bill providing for the bonding of the City of Oswego for $200,000 to go to Lake Ontario for water.

Senator Grady said that he had received word from Recorder Bulger of Oswego, that there were serious objections to the passage of the bill in its present form; and said that he would explain more at length at a later session, reasons why the bill should not pass. The motion to reconsider the vote was adopted and the bill will be debated on third reading Monday night.

ADULTERATION OF MILK.

Legislation Proposed on the Subject to Put a Stop to It.

A bill to prevent the skimming or adulteration of milk at milk stations and creameries will be introduced in in the Legislature this month. Under the present law, milk can be doctored and apparently made to fulfill the requirements of the test. It is to catch the people who evade the law in this clever fashion that the Anti-Skimming Milk bill is to be offered.

Under its provisions the State Commissioner of Agriculture will have power to subpoena the manager of a creamery and put him under oath, for the purpose of finding out whether he adulterates the milk. Every creamery will be compelled to take out a State License, chiefly to give the State Commissioner information and names with which he may begin proceedings.

Against Killing of Song Birds.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Audubon Society of New York held Jan. 28, 1905, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

Resolved, That this Board very heartily approves of Senate Bill No. 109, introduced by the Hon. Mr. Armstrong, and it believes that the passage of the said bill will be a great benefit to the citizens of the State, inasmuch as it will prevent loss of life and by prohibiting aliens from carrying firearms of any kind and will prevent the lowest class of foreigners from slaughtering song and insectivorous birds, as is commonly done by them at the present time.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to each member of the legislature and to the press of the State.

INOCULATING THE SOIL.

Discoveries of Dr. Moore May Mean Revolution In Farming.

The idea of inoculating the soil with benign bacteria to increase its fertility and multiply the fruits of the ground is something one might expect to find in a story by Jules Verne, but scarcely in real life. Yet that is just the idea that is now being put into effect by the United States department of agriculture. The department has begun sending out to farmers beneficent germs whose use, it is claimed, will enable the husbandman to multiply indefinitely the yield of his fields. No greater benefit could have been conferred had the government undertaken to supply the magic wands used by the heroes of fairy tales. It is prophesied that the new soil inoculation process will ere long make the department of agriculture the most popular branch of the government with the farmers.

If these expectations are realized chief credit will be due to Dr. George T. Moore, director of the laboratory of plant physiology in the bureau of plant industry. He has studied the problem of how to cultivate and distribute nitrogen producing bacteria so that the processes of nature in the production of vegetation may be aided and man thereby be benefited. As a result of this study the agricultural department announces that it is ready to ship colonies of the soil bacteria to agriculturists making application for them.

It is a familiar fact that fields may be enriched by plowing under beans, clover and alfalfa. This restores fertility to wornout fields. The reason is that the roots of these plants have bulbs that are masses of bacteria which constantly draw free nitrogen from the air and distribute this life of the plant world among the plants and in the ground. With this fact as a starting point, Dr. Moore, who is an authority in botany and a member of various learned societies, though only about thirty years of age, has experimented and studied. He has found a way at last by which colonies of soil bacteria can be systematically produced and distributed. The postal service is used in the distribution, and the farmer who receives a shipment of this kind may, by following the simple directions given, treat the seed that he sows in such a way as to increase by many times the yield of his field.

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

The more Magazines there are, the more Indispensable is The Review of Reviews

"Indispensable," "The one magazine I feel I must take," "The world under a field-glass," "An education in public affairs and current literature,"—these are some of the phrases one hears from noted people who read the Review of Reviews. The more magazines there are, the more necessary is the Review of Reviews, because it brings together the best that is in all the most important monthlies of the world. Such is the flood of periodical literature that nowadays people say that the only way to keep up with it is to read the Review of Reviews. Entirely over and above this reviewing section, it has more original matter and illustrations than most magazines, and the most timely and important articles printed in any monthly.

Probably the most useful section of all is Dr. Albert Shaw's illustrated "Progress of the World," where public events and issues are authoritatively and lucidly explained in every issue. Many a subscriber writes, "This department alone is worth more than the price of the magazine." The unique cartoon department, depicting current history in caricature, is another favorite. The Review of Reviews covers five continents, and yet is American, fair and fearless.

Men in public life, the members of Congress, professional men, and the great captains of industry who must keep "up with the times," intelligent men and women all over America, have decided that it is "indispensable."

SOUVENIER OF WOODSBOURGH.

IN THE DAIRY

Reading the big records of some of the best thoroughbreds, I became interested to know what a good native or mongrel bred cow would do. I selected one of our best cows for a trial, writes a New York correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman.

The cow was twelve years old and dropped a heifer April 19, 1903, and the test was begun April 25 and concluded April 25, 1904. Each milking was weighed and marked on a tally sheet, and a composite sample was taken and tested by the buttermaker at the Cambridge (N. Y.) creamery where her milk went every day of the year, with the following results: Total milk yield, 13,580 pounds, with an average per cent of fat of 4.09; yield of butter fat, 556 pounds, equal to 649 pounds of butter.

During the year this cow was fed 1,824 pounds of clover hay, 4,320 pounds of ensilage, 1,731 pounds of grain and 50 bushels of turnips. She was seven months on pasture. The total cost of keep was $52.85 and her net profit $103.05.

During three months of the year—May, June and July—this cow was fed no grain, and the other four months she was on pasture she was fed three pounds daily, and for the five winter months nine pounds of grain were fed each day.

The grain consisted one part, by measure, of corn on the ear, one part oats, one part rye and one part cull peas and beans, all ground together.

This cow never missed a feed in the whole year and never gave less than twenty-six pounds or more than fifty-four and a half pounds of milk in one day. Her success lies in her ability to eat and digest a large amount of feed each day. Her breeding is about one-fourth Holstein and one-fourth brown Swiss. The rest is unknown blood. Her mother and her grandmother were both extraordinary milkers.

Sire More Than Half.

The old saying, "The sire is half the herd," does not always express the whole truth, said Professor Fraser of Illinois university in a recent address. In a sire whose ancestors have been bred for dairy purposes only these characteristics have become firmly fixed, and when crossed on cows of no special breeding will produce calves more like the sire than the dam. In this case the sire counts for more than half. A dairyman may start with nothing but the most ordinary cows, and by simply breeding to dairy sires of excellent quality and pure breeding he will in a few years have a fine working herd. Do not misunderstand me. I am advocating grading but not crossing breeds. Great harm has been done and is still being done to the dairy cattle of the country by crossing.

Apples and Pomace For Cows.

Apples contain only 17 per cent of solid matter, and of this one-half is sugar. There is very little real nutriment in apples, but what there is is healthful and wholly free from objection in any way, says American Cultivator. They have a distinct tendency to increase the milk, and without lessening its value in any way. This is probably on account of their effect in aiding the digestion of other food. The crushed pulp of apples—the pomace of cider mills—is very agreeable to cows, and as it may be kept in good condition, packed in barrels as soon as it is taken from the press, it is worth while to save it. This kind of feed, too, helps other feeding by making a pleasant variety.

R. R.—ANDREW CARNEGIE says: "I think THE WORLD'S WORK remarkable."

Profit In the Dairy.

Every dairyman should have a profitable standard of production for his cows, and any mature cow that does not come up to this standard should be disposed of at once. What this profitable standard is each must determine for himself, as it will depend upon the cost of feed and care and the value of the product in that particular locality. This standard should be gradually raised each year by weeding out the poorest cows and breeding only from the best. The only way this can be done intelligently is by keeping a record of each individual cow.—Professor Fraser of Illinois Agricultural College.

Poke Root For Garget.

Poke root is probably the most effective known remedy for garget, or mastitis, says Hoard's Dairyman. It lessens the inflammation and prevents suppuration if applied externally or taken internally. The dose in these cases is from one-third ounce to two ounces three times daily. It is not usually applied in form of a poultice, but is just as effective in this way, if not more. When given internally it is well to give an ounce of acetate of potash with each dose.

The Butter Eye.

A yellowish tinge in the skin is considered a point of great importance in Jersey cattle. How much foundation there may be for it has never been satisfactorily determined, but there is an impression among certain breeders that the presence of an orange circle around the eye is indicative of the ability of the cow possessing it to not only produce a great yield of butter but to [illegible]

Grade Dairy Cattle.

The Michigan experiment station is collecting a herd of grade dairy cattle throughout the state with a view of determining what can be accomplished in up grading to improve the common dairy cattle of the country, or, in other words, to see how long it will take to produce a light grade equal to a full blood from the standpoint of utility. The experiment will last over a period of twelve years. The secondary object of the experiment will be to determine what good care, feed and management will do to increase the productiveness of the foundation herd over the average production of the dairy cow.

Raise the Heifers.

The heifer calves from the best cows should by all means be raised. The method that is still largely practiced in some places of disposing of all the calves regardless of how good the individual or its parentage is in the end a ruinous practice to the dairy interests. The ranges are producing beef cattle, horses and sheep, but the dairy cows must be produced by dairymen only.—Cor. Farm Visitor.

Self Sucking Cow.

For the cow that robs herself and defies ordinary preventive measures try enveloping the udder in a strong sack, says Hoard's Dairyman. It is next to impossible to explain in words just how to adjust and fasten the sack, but it can be done, and one must try different methods until successful.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 15, 1905.

THE separation of Church and State in France will soon be accomplished. A measure has already been submitted to the Chamber of Deputies, which, it is reported, is more liberal than the attitude maintained by the Premier Combes Cabinet.

THE tide of emigration is now setting in toward Oklahoma and Texas, and not to the Canadian Northwest. The admission of Oklahoma to Statehood has evidently helped to stem the northward drift, settlers preferring the land of sunshine to that of snow and ice.

IF the bill recently introduced in the Texas Legislature becomes a law, a graduated tax will be imposed on bachelors. Beginning at the age of twenty one years, it will increase until at thirty-five a man will either have to possess great wealth to remain single, take refuge in matrimony or emigrate.

THE members of President Roosevelt's Cabinet have formerly tendered their resignations, to take effect March 6, in accordance with an established custom, but with the exception of Mr Wynne, who will be Counsel General at London, all will be reappointed. Mr George B. Cortelyou will be nominated on March 6 for Postmaster General.

IT is the opinion of Emperor Nicholas of Russia that a land Congress is necessary. He has expressed himself in favor of giving the people a voice in the administrative affairs of the government. A little slow in granting a reasonable request. Had the decision been reached sooner, it would not have been necessary to sacrifice so many lives for the cause.

SECRETARY of State Hay is authority for the statement that President Roosevelt recognizes the right of the Senate to reject a treaty either by a direct vote in that sense, or indirectly by changes which are incompatible with its spirit and purpose. He considers that with the Senate amendment the treaties not only cease to be a step forward in the cause of general arbitration, but are really a step backward, and therefore he is unable to present them in this altered form to the countries which have been in negotiation. The contention arose of the ratification of seven arbitration treaties which had been pending The amendment consisting of the substitution of the word "treaty" for "agreement" in the second section of the conventions, making this section read as follows:

"In each individual case the high contracting parties, before appealing to the Permanent Court of Arbitration, shall conclude a special treaty defining clearly the matter in dispute, the scope of the powers of the arbitrators and the periods to be fixed for the formation of the arbitral tribunal and the several stages of the procedure." The President has made it clear that he will take no further action with regard to the treaties and that they will find a last resting place in some pigeon hole in the State Department.

BRISTOL HILL.

The revival services, which have been in progress at the church for the past two weeks, continues this week, closing on Thursday evening. Eighteen have started the christian life thus far. Last Wednesday evening two sleigh loads of people came from the Bowen's Corners M. P. church. Rev. W. H. Tryon was with them, and they gave the meeting a great uplift. This week Wednesday or Thursday evening, the Salvation Amy of Fulton are expected to be present and assist Evangelist Blackburn. The storms have hindered the work, however, a great interest is manifest, and the church is being greatly quickened.

At the morning service next Sunday the pastor will baptise and receive a class into the church.

The third number in the lecture course will be presented at the church on Friday evening at 8 o'clock. L. W. Ford, the cartoonist of the Syracuse Herald, will be the attraction.

On account of the continuance of the special meetings, the Ladies' Aid Society will not meet until next Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 22, at the home of Mrs. William Joyce.

Mrs. S. Baldwin continues in poor health, to the regret of her many friends.

CARE OF THE BULL.

Should Have Kind Treatment, but No Familiar Petting.

The care of a stock bull should begin with his birth. He should be kept growing steadily and fed that kind of food which will produce a good growth of bone and muscle without becoming fat. Milk, new or skimmed, ground oats, bran or middlings and good hay and grass are the best foods for a bull that is intended for a long life of usefulness. Also he should have exercise by a run in a pasture or yard until he is eighteen months or two years old.

He should have kind treatment, but no familiar petting. Never on any account allow any one to play with him. The bull should be kept in the barn where he is near the cows and as near as possible to one of the main passageways. If near the cows, he is contented and more quiet, and if he stands where he constantly sees the men passing him he becomes familiar with them and is not so liable to become vicious. But on no account should the men pay any attention to him in passing, either to quarrel with him or caress him. Let them understand they are to let him alone and pay no attention whatever to him. He should be frequently let loose in the yard with the cows, and after two years old it is better to hood him when turned loose. He then gets the exercise without endangering any lives or molesting the fence. In this way the bull may be kept many years without finding out his strength, is much healthier and safer and a surer stock getter, and is, I believe, much more liable to be the sire of quiet, pleasant offspring.

In serving cows one service is enough, even better for the cow than two, and certainly better for the bull. A cow with one service is more liable to have a calf than if more are allowed. A yearling bull may serve three or four cows a week with no injury to himself if allowed only one service to the cow and a day or two between cows. I do not believe a two or three year old bull would be limited if treated in this way, and his calves will be uniformly strong. It is the injudicious treatment and worse than unnecessary overwork that injure the vitality of the bull and cause him to sire weak calves and to have an early decline of power. A little good judgment and common sense would keep almost any bull in active usefulness as long as it seemed desirable to retain him.—C. M. Winslow in Holstein-Friesian Register.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which it nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure Send for circulars, free.

POINTS ON FEEDING

Discriminate in feeding. The fresh milk cow needs more than the cow milking six months, the cow giving a large quantity of milk more than the one giving a small quantity, the growing cow more proportionally than the mature cow, the large cow more than the small one.

Corn as a Dairy Feed.

Corn may or may not be a good feed in the grain ration. It will depend upon the use the cows make of it. If you have cows that will convert it into milk, it is good; if into beef, it is bad—that is, if you are in the dairy business. Judge your cows and feed accordingly.

Use Brains In Feeding.

Don't use a shovel for feeding. Get a measure and weigh once in awhile, so that you will know approximately what each cow is getting. A scale is one of the best things you can have in the barn. Weigh the milk and then get it tested, each cow's milk separately. Use a pencil in feeding.

Roots For Drying Cows.

When a cow begins to fatten up and drop off in her milk flow, don't try to bring her back by increasing the grain ration. Another decrease in flow may [illegible] six months, don't let her get fat at it. It's not profitable to let her.

Alfalfa Hay Versus Bran.

The Virginia experiment station has been feeding alfalfa hay to milk cows in trials against bran, at $20 a ton, and the hay rated at $10 a ton, with the result that the milk on the alfalfa ration cost 5.7 cents a gallon and a pound of butter 10.4 cents. In other words, 100 pounds of milk were made 19.8 cents cheaper than with bran and 100 pounds of butter with $2.80 less outlay. This is worth looking into by the farmers where alfalfa can be grown.

The Lackawanna will allow its patrons an extra ten days in Washington by payment of one dollar in addition to the low rate made on account inauguration.

Every precaution was taken by Chief Harry L. Waugh against fire during the charity ball last Wednesday evening in Church's Hall. A line of hose was placed in the building and was attached to a near-by hydrant, men were in readiness, prepared for any emergency. Chief Waugh is to be commended for the intelligence he displays in being ready for an exigency, should it arise. Promptness and efficiency count in the management of a fire department, and these appear to be Chief Waugh's characteristics.

Your Coal Bin Leaks

This is something we have drawn your attention to several times lately. We know your objection to leaks and have felt all along that sooner or later you would awake to a realization of the fact that, with coal at $6.25 and coke at only $4.00, the difference—$2.25—is nothing more nor less than what we term "leakage."

Considering that Coke costs $2.25 less per ton than coal; that in bulk it is double that of coal; that its lasting qualities are good; that it radiates a greater heat; that it is free from dust; that it throws off no gas and leaves no clinkers, we are led to ask, how many people can afford to give coke the cold shoulder?

Folk Who Are In the Limelight Of Publicity

EMPEROR NICHOLAS II. of Russia likes to be called the "little father" by his people, but it is sometimes said that the real "little father" of the Russians is Count Leo Nikolaievitch Tolstoi because of his moral and intellectual power over them and his lifelong work for the betterment of their social and spiritual condition. According to a dispatch to the New York World, Count Tolstoi does not sympathize with the efforts recently made to bring about reforms in the Russian government through resort to force. He says the Russian people do not desire revolution; that those in the cities desire only opportunity to work under honest conditions and those in the country desire only the ownership of the land. They desire continuance of the autocratic monarchy, he says, as the best safeguard against the nobility and landed aristocracy. Never, he thinks, will there be an armed general revolution in Russia, as the reforms needed must come through spiritual enlightenment, passive resistance and a campaign of education.

COUNT TOLSTOI.

Count Tolstoi's abhorrence of war, even in behalf of reforms, does not come from cowardice, for he joined the army as a young man and served in the Crimean war, doing good service in the battle of Tchernaya. But the horrors of battle impressed him so much that he determined to preach the doctrines of peace the remainder of his days.

Though the son of a princess and cradled in luxury, Tolstoi has for years lived as a peasant, tilling the soil and performing all kinds of menial labor, refraining from the use of the large income he might receive. He carries his ideas to such an extreme that when his son returned from the completion of his technical education at the St. Petersburg School of Technology and asked his father what use he should make of his knowledge the sage advised him to take a spade and clear the roads of snow.

The career of William F. Potter, the successor of the late W. H. Baldwin as president of the Long Island railroad, illustrates the possibilities of advancement which the railway service presents. Mr. Potter was born in 1855 at Utica, N. Y.; educated at Worcester, Mass., and in Europe, and at twenty began business life as a clerk in the office of the auditor of the Pere Marquette railroad. His salary was $45 a month. A year's work brought him promotion to a clerkship in the office of the treasurer of the road, but he soon made up his mind that the best chances of advancement lay in the operative branch of the railway service and therefore at his own request was made a conductor. He served five years taking tickets on trains before being made a station master. From this position he rose through various grades of executive management until he was general superintendent of the Pere Marquette. In 1897 Mr. Baldwin, who had been connected with this road, was chosen president of the Long Island railroad, and he invited Mr. Potter to become its general superintendent. He took the position and last March was chosen vice president and general manager. For some months during Mr. Baldwin's illness he discharged the duties of president, and when death made the office vacant the directors chose him to fill it.

W. F. POTTER.

The career of Elmer J. Burkett, the senator elect from Nebraska, resembles in some respects that of William J. Bryan, who would have been chosen senator instead of Mr. Burkett had the Nebraska legislature been Democratic instead of Republican. Mr. Burkett was born on a farm in Iowa in 1867. Like Mr. Bryan, he went to college and afterward studied law. Both are residents of Lincoln and have represented the First Nebraska district in congress, and each was elected to congress before he was thirty years old. Both have met with opposition in their political careers on account of youth. Both have sturdy frames, penetrating brown eyes and faces that evince the earnestness of their personalities. Like Mr. Bryan again, Senator Burkett is a forceful speaker, though he has won his reputation in congress rather through hard work than oratory. He is a member of the appropriations committee and is one of Uncle Joe Cannon's main props. He is quite a fighter, but has a capacity for making friends even when fighting. One day during his first campaign for congress he ran into a neighborhood row. The hogs of one farmer had rooted up a field of corn belonging to a neighbor. The hogs had crawled through a division fence owned by both men. The man with the corn thrashed out his grievance to [illegible] talk about the time [illegible]

ELMER J. BURKETT.

[illegible] men waiting for him to side one way or the other. How he did it no one knows, but in less than an hour those two farmers who had threatened to go to law over the matter and law for the rest of their born days were out fixing up that fence, and Burkett got the solid delegation from that precinct.

The new premier of France, M. Maurice Rouvier, has had a life full of remarkable episodes. He was born at Aix in 1842 and as a young man was a book agent. He entered the service of a Greek who was engaged in the Russian grain trade, and in this business he traveled through the orient and acquired a knowledge of conditions in that part of the world which became of much use to him when he entered politics. He was premier in 1887 and in the recent cabinet of M. Combes was minister of finance. His name has been associated with scandal, for at one time he was charged with gross immorality and at another with forgery, but in neither case were the charges proved. Though a man of marked ability himself, he owes much of his success to his late wife, who was one of the cleverest women of her time and had a career even stranger than her husband's. At sixteen she persuaded a famous priest, the Abbe Constant, to break his vows of celibacy for her sake. He was excommunicated. She deserted him after two years and, turning her attention to sculpture, became famous in that art. She also won popularity as a novelist. She was a favorite of Emperor Napoleon III., her relations with whom were the subject of scandal. As a correspondent in the chamber of deputies she became acquainted with M. Rouvier, whose political advancement she aided by her writings. The death of the ex-abbe enabled her to marry the rising French statesman. As Mme. Rouvier she became a leading figure in the life of the French capital.

M. ROUVIER.

Representative John Sharp Williams, whose leadership of the Democratic minority in the house is being hotly contested, tells more anecdotes a week than any statesman in Washington.

"There was a sure thing gambler down in Mississippi named Gamble," Mr. Williams said the other day. "He never made a bet unless he was sure he would win. He was out at a country fair, staying at a hotel. One morning a man who was in the sporting line himself got up early and looked out of the window. He saw Gamble carefully measuring with a tapeline the hitching post in front of the hotel. He knew something was up, and when Gamble went out to the fair he went out and measured the hitching post himself. Then he took a sledge hammer and drove the post into the ground an inch and a half.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

"That night after supper, while they were all sitting on the hotel porch, Gamble craftily led the conversation around to the difficulty of judging distances and heights.

"'Now,' he said, 'there's that hitching post out yonder. I'll bet a hundred I can come nearer to its height than anybody here.'

"'How high would you reckon it is?' asked the sledge hammer artist, who, after a lot of conversation, had put up the hundred with Gamble.

"'Oh,' said Gamble, 'I'll take it at thirty inches.'

"'Oh, no,' replied the other man; 'you are wrong. I'll bet it is less than twenty-nine.'

"They measured, and it was twenty-eight and a half. Gamble hasn't smiled since that day."

Governor Edward Wallace Hoch of Kansas, who was swept into office last fall by the tide of popular sentiment and in spite of the opposition of many politicians in his party, is the editor of a country paper. Two years ago he sought the office of state printer, and the circumstances of his defeat for this position created a sentiment in his favor that resulted in his nomination for the more exalted post of chief executive of the state. Governor Hoch was born in Kentucky fifty-three years ago and was educated and learned the printing trade in the Blue Grass State. In 1872 he removed to Kansas. He got a job sticking type on a weekly at Florence. The local banker, who owned the plant, ran away from his creditors, and, not being able to carry off the newspaper office, the young printer was left in possession. He was editor, printer, pressman, devil and business manager all in one.

EDWARD W. HOCH.

Litigation let him out of the Florence paper. In three months he left it, and in 1873, when he had turned twenty-four, he walked to Marion and began work on the Record as a journeyman printer. The owner of the paper soon owed his printer so much that he could not pay. He made the best of the situation by turning the plant over to Mr. Hoch, mortgage and all. As the young editor's capital at the outset was only $10, it was a hard proposition to handle, but he swung it and in spite of the grasshoppers which visited Kansas [illegible] by strict econo-

DAIRY COW'S BEST AGE.

She Is at Her Maximum Between Five and Eight.

The abundance of the milk secretion, which attains its maximum at a certain period in the life of the cow, depends mainly on the energy of her assimilative powers and in general on the activity of her vital powers, which also reach a culminating point at a given time in the life of the animal, says the Live Stock Journal (British).

It is of course well known that during the first couple of lactation periods the yield is not equal to that obtained when the cow is fully matured and also that very old cows give poor returns. Considered from a physiological point of view, this is obvious, for until a cow is fully matured—i. e., has ceased growing—part of the food which is taken into her body is used up for the growth of the body and therefore cannot serve for the production of milk. Full development is reached after the third or fourth lactation, and it is about this time that the highest yields may be looked for, although in this matter very much depends upon the individuality of the cow and also upon the manner in which she is fed and treated.

Some years ago, writing upon this subject, Woll stated that tests specially made went to show that under the same conditions cows six or seven years old do best. This was the case with the cows in the ninety day test at the Chicago World's fair, and the conclusions drawn are that the maximum annual production and the greatest profits obtained from a cow will, as a rule, come at from five to eight years and that young animals give richer milk than older ones.

It is evident, therefore, that one might only very exceptionally retain cows of more than eight or nine years of age, as their milking qualities are then generally rapidly declining, and, moreover, the cows are less easily fattened.

As young animals produce more from the same quantity of food, owing to their assimilative powers being more energetic, there is every reason for not keeping cows too long.

Signs of the Udder.

As much importance should be attached to the shape and quality of the udder of the dairy cow as to its size. A cow may have a large udder, yet give a small quantity of milk. A cow with a deep, narrow udder ending in large teats is seldom a good milker. A heavy milker must have a large udder, but it is rather broad than long, and to carry it well without bruising or chafing the hind feet should be well apart. Such an udder should have short hair and when milked should be shrunk in size and the skin should hang loosely over its surface. The shape and set of the teats are important considerations in buying a cow. An ideal shaped teat is long and rather slim.

Cure For Coughing Cow.

Boil a teacup of flaxseed to a pulp and while hot pour it on half a pail of bran and make a mash of it. Give her a mash of this kind once a day, with one of the following powders in it: Mix four ounces each of sulphate of iron and nitrate of potassium and divide into twenty-four doses.

The Small Herd.

Many a dairyman would do better if he owned but ten good dairy cows instead of the twenty that he now owns.

FOR DAIRY FARMERS

I believe it is the experience of all with dairy cows that those with large stomachs and strong digestive powers are the most profitable in converting food into milk and butter fat, says a New York correspondent of Ohio Farmer. The aim, therefore, in rearing dairy calves should be to keep them in a growing condition all the time and encourage a large stomach by feeding largely on bulky food, such as clover hay, bran, etc., and especially guard against the digestive organs getting deranged.

The Cow Needs Care.

The straw stack is a poor protection as well as poor feed for the hardworking dairy cow, says Hoard's Dairyman. She needs a warm barn and plenty of well prepared feed.

Warm the Drinking Water.

This is the time of year that cows do not enjoy drinking ice water. It is cheaper to warm their drinking water with wood or coal than with bran that costs $23 a ton.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Improve the Herd.

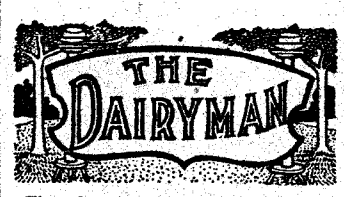
Has your dairy paid during the past season? If so, prepare now to make it do better next year. Make a dicker with the indifferent cow buyer or the butcher to take the poor cows off your hands. Take this money and hunt a smaller number of cows that you know are good. Do this every year, and you will be surprised at the results of your sagacity; also plan now to give your herd more and better feed next year. Don't buy it if you can avoid it, but think it out and see if your land will not produce it in one crop or another.—Holstein-Friesian Register.

To Tell a Good Cow.

As all outward signs sometimes fail, the best way to tell a good cow is by the Babcock tester and the weigh scales, as there is the greatest chance for self deception in handling dairy cows.

The Kicking Cow.

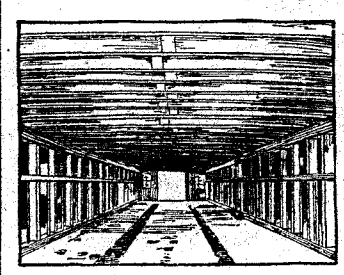
The dairy cow should be gentle, milk easily, give a fair flow of milk and hold out well. A cow that does not possess each one of these virtues is not a suitable animal to be kept long on the farm. Kicking and restless cows and cows which milk hard are nuisances,



LEGAL NOTICES.

Notice to Creditors.

In pursuance of an order of Sheldon B. Mead, Surrogate of the county of Oswego, New York, notice is hereby given according to law, to all persons having claims against Andrus G. Morse, late of the Town of Volney in said County, deceased, that they are required to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber at her residence in the Town of Volney, in the County of Oswego, New York, on or before the 15th day of April, 1905.



Dated this 10th day of October, A. D., 1904.

MARGARET L. MORSE,
Executrix.

The advantages of a cow stable having the two rows of cows facing in opposite directions can be stated as being many, writes a New York dairyman in American Cultivator.

The plan permits one to drive a wagon directly through the stable on the platform or driveway between the two drops. Into its water tight box the liquids and solids are gathered and taken directly to the fields. It affords a greater convenience in putting the cows in and letting them out of the stable, in that they all go through a wide door and into a much greater space than where the other plan is used.

The stable can be kept cleaner, as all the manure is confined in one space and is more easily removed from the stable. Another gain is the greater rapidity with which the herd can be milked, as the milkers can pass from one row of cows to the other without passing around the two rows of cows.

Some of our barns are arranged for the wagon wheels to go in the drops, but by far the better way is to have it run on top of the driveway. The platform or driveway of my barn is five feet eight inches between the drops. My wagon is four feet six inches, which obviates any chance of getting the wheels into the drops.

In these days of certified milk it has been clearly shown that the paramount duty is to maintain a high standard of absolute cleanliness. This plan keeps all the manure within easy reach of your wagon for removal and between the cows, the walls or sides of your stable never get spattered with the droppings from the cows as they are put in or let out. Your land is benefited with the liquids, which possess nearly as much enriching properties as the solids.

The alleyways in front of the cows are seven feet two inches wide, the beds on which the cows stand are four feet seven inches on one row and four feet eight inches on the other, while the drops are sixteen inches wide and six inches deep.

Home Buttermaking.

Keep your cream in such a manner that it may ripen evenly, which will prevent loss in churning, writes a correspondent of American Cultivator. Raise the temperature to about 68 degrees and keep it near that temperature until ripe and then cool it down before churning. Well ripened cream should be coagulated or thickened. It should run from a height in a smooth stream like oil. When a "hand" is dipped into it and held up it should stick all over in a thick, even coat, not running off and showing the surface of the hand. When the last drops run off the hand back into the cream holder, they should leave little dents or depressions on the surface, which do not close up for a second. The cream should have a satiny gloss or fresh surface. Churn until the granules are the size of wheat kernels, then draw off the buttermilk and wash through two or three waters.

Quieting a "Green" Horse.

The sight of a big draft horse with its head entirely wrapped in a rubber coat attracted the attention of hundreds of persons in the neighborhood of Twelfth and Market streets a few days ago. Many stopped in wonder, and not a few inquired from the driver the reason for this unusual proceeding.

He was an obliging young fellow and was industriously hauling up ashes from a cellar beneath the pavement and dumping them into the wagon to which the horse with the coat on its head and a meek looking gray were hitched.

"Well, you see," said the driver, "this is the first day in the city for that young horse. He is just in from the west, and the strange sights and sounds make him very nervous. When I stopped here he was pulling and hauling, so I just put my coat over his head. Now he is afraid to start either way."

It seemed to be a good idea, for the powerful animal, although trembling and ill at ease, stood still and gave the driver no trouble whatever, and the latter did not even hitch his team.

It was an illustration of how much good the exercise of a little judgment and forethought will do.—Philadelphia

Freshness of Youth.

He was a respectable looking man, and, judging from his appearance, he was a butcher by trade, and this belief was verified a few minutes later. He carried a white apron under his arm, and as he entered a car a huge cleaver dropped from the bundle to the floor. A youth who had not reached the age of discretion sank out merrily, "Say, mister, you dropped your pocketknife." The passengers laughed, but they could not help but think that the youth took a long chance on kidding a man with a cleaver.—Albany Journal.

INCREASING FAT IN MILK.

Varying Opinions as to the Efficacy of High Feeding.

Increasing the fat in milk is one of the much disputed questions. Many dairymen believe that milk can easily be made richer in butter fat by high feeding, while our experimenters from their rather limited experiments have concluded that the farmers and dairymen are mistaken and that feed has practically no effect on the fat content of the milk, says L. W. Lighty in National Stockman.

The Cornell experiment station lately issued a bulletin (No. 222) giving full particulars of a four year experiment. The plan of the experiment was to take cows that were kept on a farm on rather poor feed and an insufficient ration and learn what they would do under those conditions and then take them to the station and feed them up to their capacity of eating and digesting a ration rich in protein, digestible and such as any practical dairyman might consider very good feeding. These cows were such as are very often kept on farms, some natives and some with Jersey or Shorthorn blood.

The various tables in the bulletin show very distinctly that the individuality of the cow is an important factor. While some cows show a gain of about 10 per cent in total butter fat while under liberal feeding, others show little or none, yet on the whole herd of ten cows the increase in fat was about 6 per cent. At the same time the milk production was increased 50 per cent, and this increase was secured economically so far as food cost was concerned.

From what Professor H. H. Wing, under whose direction this experiment was conducted, said before the Normal institute at Cornell I concluded that his conclusion is that the farmers and dairymen were not entirely wrong when they believed that liberal feeding made richer milk, but at the same time the improvement along this line is limited. More of those practical common sense experiments are needed to fully demonstrate this problem.

Dairy Cleanliness.

How in the name of common sense can we expect good, pure milk from a cow that is fed on any kind of green feed, dumped into a filthy barnyard, or allowed to run to a pile of horse manure? No wonder everything stinks, says an Ohio farmer in National Stockman. I don't care how particular a person may be about clean stables, clean feeding and milking, if all utensils used in making butter are not properly washed, scalded and aired they will stink, and stinking butter will be the result. In nine cases out of ten I can tell a good buttermaker by the smell of her churn and butter bowl and can tell a good dishwasher with my eyes shut. Dishes that are taken out of soapsuds and mopped a little feel sticky and greasy, but when rinsed in hot water and wiped dry they will shine and are clean.

Butter For the Navy.

The dairy division of the department of agriculture has been assisting in procuring butter for the use of the navy and the army by drawing contracts for buttermaking and supervising their execution. Under this system over 700,000 pounds of butter have been purchased during the year by the navy department alone.

Benefits of Soiling.

Trials at the experiment station of Wisconsin showed that by soiling in summer a certain area of land will yield double the amount of milk and butter that it will when pasteurized.

BUTTER AND CHEESE

Succulent food increases the flow of milk, but does not materially increase the proportion of water in it. The relative proportions of fat and casein are changed in a marked manner by a change in the ration. An extra yield of butter will naturally follow the use of richer feed if the cow has been well selected.

Ripen the Cream.

Cream should not be churned the day it is taken from the milk, but should be allowed to ripen.

Sage Cheese.

Sage cheese is very popular for local distribution in certain parts of the United States. It is manufactured like ordinary cheese, but an infusion of sage leaves or sage extract is added to the milk before the rennet is put in. It gives a greenish color to the product and a characteristic flavor.—American Agriculturist.

When to Churn.

Always churn just as soon as there is cream enough and sufficient acidity develops. If cream is held beyond this it will be injured.

Salt In the Churn.

Salting in churns is practiced by most creamery buttermakers, says American Agriculturist. It is thus possible to incorporate the salt more evenly than by simply working it in after the butter is taken from the churn. About one ounce of salt to the pound is a standard quantity.

Cream Hard to Soften.

Cream globules made from cows long in milk are coated with the cheesy matter of the milk more tenaciously, as this white substance is more solid or firm than during the first months of milking and is not so easily rubbed off, and, being very hard to soften, long churning is needed.

Foaming Cream.

Foaming of cream in the churn may be due to too low or too high temperature or too long keeping. When the cream is perfectly ripened before churning the churn gets out more of the fat and the churning takes [illegible]

"Maddening Potted Phrases."

We have protested against the "faultless even dress" of the hurried descriptive writer, since evening dress is the only male attire that excludes the possibility of error. But a long list could be made of the phrases—tinned and stale—which all writers use who write like enterprising and hurried builders building with ready made doors and window panes. For example, one never reads an account of a railway accident from the lips of the "badly shaken" passenger without finding that "all went well until"—the thing happened But perhaps the most maddening of these potted phrases is "the rash act." You will read how Mr. Smith or Mr Brown sat down and wrote several long letters to his relatives, how he had with great care arranged his affairs, how with the utmost deliberation he purchased poison, a revolver, a new razor and a ball of twine; how he sent his family away for a holiday, went to his room and conscientiously poisoned, strangled, sliced and shot himself. "No reason," runs the inevitable comment, "is assigned for the rash act," which was as deliberate as the movement of the Rhone glacier.—London Chronicle.

Afraid of Strong Medicines.

Many people suffer for years from rheumatic pains, and prefer to do so rather than take the strong medicines usually given for rheumatism, not knowing that quick relief from pain may be had simply by applying Chamberlain's Pain Balm and without taking any medicine internally. Rev. Amos Parker of Magnolia, North Carolina, suffered for eight years with a lame hip, due to severe rheumatic pains. He has been permanently cured by the free application of Chamberlains pain Balm for sale by H. C. Giesler.

Unprofitable Dairying.

The proportion of "boarder" to profitable cows in Missouri and almost every other state is probably about six to one—that is, where one returns a profit on investment, feed and labor, six do not pay for their keep.—Farmers Advocate.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy the Mother's Favorite

The soothing and healing properties of this remedy, its pleasant taste and prompt and permanent cures have made it a favorite with people everywhere. It is especially prized by mothers of small children, for colds, croup and whooping cough, as it always affords quick relief, and as it contains no opium or other harmful drug, it may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. The Englishman's Morning Tub.

Until the beginning of the seventeenth century English princes and other babes were immersed three times in the font when christened. The last Prince of Wales who was submitted to this ordeal appears to have been Arthur, the son of Henry II., who died in 1562 at the age of sixteen. The abolition of the practice was strongly objected to upon sanitary grounds by Sir John Floyer, a celebrated physician who died in 1734. "Immersion," he says, "would prevent many hereditary diseases," and "the English will return to it when physic has given them a clear proof that cold baths are both safe and useful." So our morning tub is the outcome of royal immersion.—London Mail.

What the Fingers Tell.

Pointed fingers are said to indicate a love of luxury, combined in many cases with a tendency to idleness. Here may be seen the influence of heredity. Ancestors of the past in easy circumstances had no need to work. They had hard places smoothed for them, and servants did the laborious tasks. So their skin remained fine and their muscles unstretched and their finger tips in fair shape. They bequeathed the sign of ease, rest, affluence, to their posterity. Tramps of the genius "Weary Willie" often have this sign of pointed fingers. Money did not descend with the luxurious instinct. Workers bequeathed square, flat tips to posterity and with them stores of energy. Square fingers on a well proportioned hand show much ability to reason and to plan and to carry out plans. The owner of the pointed fingers may reason equally well, but is likely to lack executive ability.

Turkish Attar of Roses.

Turkish attar of roses is mainly produced in Bulgaria and is carried on in the fertile valleys on the southern slopes of the Balkans. The rose harvest in Bulgaria begins about the third week in May and lasts about a month. The second great seat of rose farming in Europe is the space between the Maritime Alps and the Mediterranean, in the extreme southeast of France. This is, in fact, the great scent farming and perfumery making center of Europe, the town of Grasse being the emporium of the district. Of course attar of roses is also produced in India, Persia and Asiatic Turkey under the climatic conditions desired, but the great bulk of the supply is furnished by the European regions already noted. The roses employed for attar making in Europe are: In Bulgaria the red damask rose and in the south of France the Provence rose, a hybrid or variety of the hundred leaf rose, to which also belongs the well known cabbage rose.

Startling But True.

People the world over were horrified on learning of the burning of a Chicago theatre in which nearly six hundred people lost their lives, yet more than five times this number or over 3,000 people died from pneumonia during the same year, with scarcely a passing notice. Everyone of these cases resulted from a cold and could have been prevented by the timely use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. A great many who had every reason to fear pneumonia have warded it off by the prompt use of this remedy. The following is an instance of this sort: Too much cannot be said in favor of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and especially for colds and influenza. I know that it cured my daughter, Laura, of a severe cold, and I believe saved her life when she was threatened with pneumonia." W. D. Wilcox, Logan, New York: Sold by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

The Profitable Herd.

To get the greatest value out of a herd one must go behind returns from the entire herd. It is not enough that the herd pays as a whole. The question concerns the product of each individual in the herd. Does every cow in the herd pay a profit on her feed? Fortunately or unfortunately, as one may regard it, all cows do not produce the same quantity or quality of milk. Though they may belong to the same breed or may be even closely related, they cannot be depended on to be equally valuable.

Value of Good Feeding.

Certain experts contend that you cannot feed butter fat into a cow; that no matter how rich the feed the per cent of fat will be practically unchanged. But they all concede that you can increase the milk flow by judicious feeding; hence herein lie the increased profits from improved methods.

It will pay you to keep Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in your home. It only costs a quarter. Sold by H. C. Giesler.

Gossip About The People Of Stageland

GEORGE ALI AS TIGE.

GEORGE ALI, who plays Tige, the dog in "Buster Brown," at the Majestic theater, New York, is said to be the cleverest animal actor in the world. He is a Frenchman and made his first appearance in America a few years ago at Weber & Field's theater. It was a lucky day for him when he was cast for the part of Tige. To play the role of a dog, and especially such a knowing one as the protector of Buster Brown, requires a great deal of imitative faculty and a strong sense of the humorous, even if not the histrionic talent of a Booth or an Irving. Sometimes a person will say that he feels like a dog, but he doesn't really mean it. Ali, however, does try to feel like a dog, and that, he thinks, is the secret of his success. He tries to put himself in the dog's place and studies to get the dog's idea of things. The role of the dog is by no means an easy one. The actor who takes it, says Mr. Ali, leads a dog's life.

Like Ernest Thompson Seton, Mr. Ali might write a book on "Wild Animals I Have Known," only most of his animal friends have not been very wild. He has usually been content with cultivating the acquaintance of harmless beasts like kangaroos and donkeys and impersonating such roles. He made his first pronounced hit in England as a jackass and has been a parrot and even an eel, but he never before had so difficult a part as that of Tige. As Buster Brown's ever ready friend he makes up to look like an English bulldog, but is about the size of a St. Bernard. With twelve pieces of twine arranged in Tige's fore legs he manipulates the eyes, ears and other features as he trots around the stage, and the expressions he gets in this way give Tige such a look of intelligence and sagacity that it is hard to believe him only a make believe.

The Tige of the play is a big dog, larger than a dog of his breed in real life, but the Buster Brown of drama is about the size one would expect, and the contrast between small youngster and big dog forms one of the comic effects of the piece. The part of Buster Brown is played by Master Gabriel, who is old enough to be an actor, but small enough to look as if just emerging from infancy. He is just old enough to vote, but can make up to look like a five-year-old without shrinking a bit. The hooks in his dressing room are arranged only three feet from the door. Master Gabriel's birthplace is New York city. He weighed fifteen ounces when first put on the scales, and at four he was still "little, but, oh, my!" He could then read, write and talk as well as the ordinary child of ten. His parents, with a fine sense of the fitness of things, removed with their small but precocious son to diminutive Rhode Island, and at twelve Master Gabriel graduated from a public school with the highest percentage of any child ever graduated in "Little Rhody." They took him to Paris, where he remained four years, and at sixteen he could talk glibly in four languages. He has traveled all over the United States without paying any railroad fare, as he is always taken for a child. He has accumulated a fortune and owns one of the largest stock farms in Rhode Island. "The Original Buster Brown" says that he enjoys nothing so much as looking out into an audience and seeing the children laugh at his antics. "Sometimes," he adds, "I find a tear stealing down my cheek when I see the little ones laughing so hard, for then I realize what I missed, for I never was a child."

MASTER GABRIEL.

Some years ago, when Raymond Hitchcock of the "Yankee Consul" company was realizing all the vicissitudes of life with a barnstorming troupe, he was called on to play the hero in one of those lurid melodramas which rejoice in such titles as "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," etc. During the course of the action the hero, after experiencing all the ills that flesh is heir to from the sleek cigarette smoking villain, is finally tied to the railroad track.

...ROAD.

"My character," said the comedian in telling the story recently, "was that of a brave section hand, and, if I remember rightly, the heroine was the daughter of the village boarding house keeper. The ... first locked the suffering ... in the flagman's shanty, and ... a terrible encounter, he ... and fled me to the track. ... my aid on this occa... to place the ax ... eyes to break ... from my ...

The men in charge of the train were overzealous and without waiting until the all necessary ax was secured started the train. Eight day coaches and a baggage car passed over me, to say nothing of the pasteboard engine, yet I was ready in the next act to deal out deferred retribution to that deep dyed villain."

Maclyn Arbuckle, who plays the country lawyer and party leader in "The County Chairman," has a quaint makeup and one which was copied from an old tintype of himself when he was an attorney in Texas and ran for justice of the peace. His defeat for that office led to his going on the stage. He had an amusing experience one evening when playing the role of the eccentric but good hearted politician. "Just before the curtain went up," says the actor, "I ventured to peep out, and there in a box near the stage sat an exact duplicate of myself in the person of a real county chairman, a well known southern gentleman, a Democrat, who rules things in Kanawha county, W. Va. Colonel Bob Carr is one of the most lovable and picturesque representatives of the old time southern aristocrat, of which there are so few left. Well, I gazed and gazed in astonishment, and when I made my entrance the audience, which had already appreciated the wonderful resemblance, applauded and laughed. That was a great evening. I met Colonel Carr afterward. It seems that his son had inveigled him into coming to New York just to have him see and meet me, and the colonel was as much astonished by my appearance as I was by his. We have since become good friends, and I have visited his home in Charleston, W. Va."

MACLYN ARBUCKLE.

"Now, when I am drawing the largest salary I have ever had, it seems odd to remember that for my first appearance I drew $50 a week," Lillian Russell said recently. "It was Mr. Tony Pastor who met me at a friend's house and to whom I confided my desire to go on the stage. He said he'd give me a position at once. Then I thought of my mother's disapproval, but Mr. Pastor suggested that I come down in my ordinary attire, sing a few ballads, and even then I could get back home before any one missed me.

LILLIAN RUSSELL.

"It was a great temptation, and I agreed. In order to keep it a secret I took the stage name of Lillian Russell—my own was Helen Louise Leonard—but there was mother to be considered. For two weeks I went unsuspected, and then a newspaper man said pleasantly to my mother:

"'You ought to see Lillian Russell, that English girl who is playing down at Pastor's.'

"Can you see me in a cold sweat? My mother went down to the performance. I hurried home and reached there before she did; then I waited in terror until she arrived. She came in, looked me over and said, 'Well, I think you can afford to pay for your own music lessons.' And after that I had to.

"I got $50 a week, and my first week's wage was advanced to get me the gown I wanted, and I paid it back $10 each week. Now, when my salary is—well, quite some, as they say in Brooklyn—I haven't any more left."

"My first part was Tilly, the slavey in 'The Hoop of Gold,'" May Robson said recently.

"When I began no one had ever told me anything about grease paint. I made up with water colors. It took me an hour and a half every night. When I smiled my face would crack."

In his "Recollections of a Player" J. H. Stoddart of "The Bonnie Brier Bush" fame tells of an incident that happened in Glasgow when he was a young actor. One George Frederick Cooke was to play Richard with the assistance of a young man cast for Ratcliff. At the end of the great speech in the tent scene this nameless performer came on to answer Richard's shout of inquiry with these words: "Ratcliff, my lord, 'tis I. The early village cock hath twice done salutation to the morn. Your friends are up and buckle on their armor." But the Ratcliff was so unnerved that he could only stammer, "'Tis I, my lord; the early village cock"— And, making another effort, he repeated this amazing declaration. Poor Cooke was hopeless and enraged and blurted forth, "Then why the devil don't you crow?" Mr. Stoddart himself had a grievous experience once in those early days. At a rehearsal of Macbeth with Macready, in which it was his business as one of the apparitions to say, "Macbeth, Macbeth, Macbeth, beware Macduff!" he was so nervous that he began, "Macduff, Macduff, Macduff," and, in spite of the profuse urgings of the great actor, he could not pronounce the name correctly. He confesses that he does not remember whether he finally said "Mack" or "Muck." But even at the start it ...

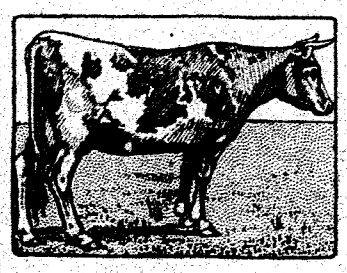
The ability to utilize food profitably and convert it into milk and butter is an individual characteristic in which there is an immense variation among cows.

The difference in the profits from keeping good, medium and poor cows has been strikingly illustrated by the experiment stations in their herd records and in various feeding experiments.

Thus a bulletin of the Utah station giving the record of fifteen cows for one year shows that the cost of the food eaten for each hundred pounds of milk produced varied with different cows from 29.48 to 52.07 cents. The cost of food per pound of butter ranged from 5.91 to 11.8 cents in the case of different cows, and with butter at 20 cents a pound the net profit per cow for one year ranged all the way from $14.71 to $51.37. The cows were common native and grades selected with considerable care.

A recent experiment of the Pennsylvania station touches on this point. Nine cows, mostly Jerseys and grade Guernseys, were fed in an experiment lasting 150 days. The difference between the profit from the best cow and the poorest cow during 150 days was $33.10. The cost of the food was very nearly as much for the poorest as for the best cow, but the value of the product from the best cow was $64.32, while that from the poorest cow was only $28.06. This gave a net profit of $37.65 from the best cow and only $4.55 from the poorest cow.



These figures emphasize the importance of keeping a record of the different cows of the herd so as to know which of the cows are being kept at a good profit and which are only barely paying their keeping and thus be able to weed out the unprofitable stock and improve the herd.—Cheese and Dairy Journal.

Improving the Dairy Herd.

I do believe there is untold benefit to be derived from grading and that this is the way to improve the average dairy stock and also to make a market for pure bred bulls. No matter how poor a herd a dairyman may have, the first crop of calves from a pure bred size will be half bloods or better and the next generation three-fourths or better. I cannot imagine how a dairyman can improve his herd more surely or more economically than by this method.—Professor Frazer of Illinois University.

A Great Guernsey.

The Guernsey cow Dolly Bloom 12770 is a remarkable butter producer. From March 26, 1902, to March 25, 1903, she gave 8,841.58 pounds milk, which contained 453.86 pounds butter fat. This was at that time the best official record of any two-year-old in the world. This record was commenced when the heifer was but twenty-three months old and closed on March 25, 1903. On Sept. 3, 1903, Dolly Bloom gave birth to a bull calf. On Sept. 7 she commenced her second official test, being then three years and five months old. From that date to Sept. 6, 1904, she gave 12,674.83 pounds milk, averaging 5.07 per cent, containing 623.4 pounds butter fat. Dolly Bloom was dropped April 14, 1900. She is owned by F. Lathrop Ames of North Easton, Mass.

Raise the Calves.

Keeping up the dairy herd by purchase is at once expensive and unreliable. By far the better way is to raise the heifer calves, which, if bred from a good sire, ought to be superior to their dams in production. A judicious selection from this source, combined with a rigid system of culling out all inferior animals, will result in great improvement in a few years' time. A certain standard set up and adhered to cannot fail of accomplishing the desired result. Keep no cow which does not approximate 300 pounds of butter in a year when matured. This standard may seem high to the man who is feeding cows which do not make 250 pounds, but it is none too high and can easily be attained by a systematic course of weeding out and grading up. In fact, a better record even than that is entirely possible to the man who knows how to feed as well as breed dairy animals.

A DARING EXPLOIT.

The Feat That Won Honors For Admiral Doubassoff.

Vice Admiral Doubassoff, who succeeded Admiral Kaznakoff as Russian member of the North sea commission, now sitting in Paris, paid a visit to the United States in 1891. He had been in the company of the czarowitz, now Emperor Nicholas II., when the latter made a prolonged tour, including Athens, Constantinople, China and Japan. When the Pacific was reached Doubassoff left his squadron and came to America for the purpose of inspecting our ships and shipyards and naval institutions and while in this country received many attentions.

At that time the events of the Russo-Turkish war of 1877 were still fresh in the memory of the public. In this contest Vice Admiral Doubassoff performed deeds which rendered him one of the foremost heroes of the conflict. The movement of the Russian army over the Danube into Bulgaria was halted by two very powerful Turkish ironclads. The Russians were not prepared to combat a naval force, but Doubassoff, then a lieutenant, had given much study to the use of explosives, and he conceived the idea of blowing up the ironclads with dynamite. To carry out his plan with the primitive means the Russians had in their possession involved such hazard that the superiors of Doubassoff discouraged him from the venture. They thought it would surely end in premature discovery and death. But with eleven trusted companions the young lieutenant set out for the warships about 2 o'clock on a foggy morning, hoping that the darkness and mist would serve to conceal their approach. A torpedo projected about sixteen feet from the prow of the Russian boat. Just as they got the torpedo in position under the largest of the ironclads the Turks discovered their presence and fired upon them. But the torpedo exploded, and the ironclad was demolished, nearly all the officers and men on board perishing with it.

Miraculous as it seems, neither Doubassoff nor any of his companions was injured in the fire from the warship or the explosion which ensued. The movement was followed up by other successes, and the Danube was cleared of obstructions. Doubassoff was decorated by the czar in person.

HIS HIGHNESS THE KABAKA.

Daudi Chwa, Monarch of Uganda, and His Reform Policy.

The newest thing in kings is the boy monarch of Uganda, his highness the Kabaka Daudi Chwa. He does not look very much like a brainy statesman, but is said to be a marked improvement over former rulers of Uganda, as he is but fifteen years of age. He is assisted in governing the country by three native chiefs, who act as regents. He is a son of the fierce and bloody Mwanga, whose conduct as potentate of Uganda was so reprehensible that he had to be deported. Daudi Chwa was proclaimed king a few months ago, and reform is all the vogue now in Uganda. He was educated by English missionaries.

Formerly the monarchs of Uganda could say the word and their command was executed, even though it involved cutting off a subject's head. English ascendency has modified all this. The rulers were formerly wont to surround themselves with soldiers, musicians, dwarfs, clowns and other adjuncts of a mediaeval oriental court. But King Daudi Chwa is more up to date. His surroundings are modern, and he goes in for bicycling and pretty soon will be driving an automobile. His personal ... to $300 a year, which is ... [illegible]

REPUBLICAN EDITORS

State Association Entertained in a Princely Manner by County Committees of New York, Kings, Queens and Richmond.

The members of the State Republican Editorial Association were entertained in a princely manner at a banquet in the Waldorf-Astoria last Wednesday evening by the Republican County Committees of Greater New York, embracing the Counties of New York, Kings, Queens and Richmond. There was an attendance of at least 350 and an admirable spirit was manifested throughout. The purpose of the gathering was to bring into closer relationship the press of the up-State with the Republican county organization in Greater New York, the laudable ambition being to win the metropolis over to Republican principles.

Instructive and interesting addresses were delivered by Ex-Governor Odell, Hon. Timothy Woodruff, Editor Wardman of the New York Press, the Hon. Seth Low and Senator Elisberg.

Chairman Halpin of the New York County Committee, acted as toastmaster, and in explaining the purpose of the gathering, gave an excellent and comprehensive statement of facts.

The plea was for co-operation with the city organization in every Legislative measure submitted at Albany in the interest of and consistent with good citizenship.

Ex-Governor Odell was the principal speaker, responding to the toast "The Relation of the Republican State Committee to the City of New York." Timothy L. Woodruff talked on "Brooklyn's Part in the Problem." "The Legislature and the City of New York" was responded to by State Senator Elsberg. Louis McKinstry, of Predonia, responded to "As the Country Views the City," and Ervin Wardman to "The Republican Press of the City of New York."

Ex-Governor Odell in his speech referred especially to personal liberty. He said:

We cannot win here until we give the people of this city what they want. And the party which faces these conditions is bound to win and maintain the confidence of the people. We should give New York the same rights which are given to other cities.

In referring to placing the Police Department in the hands of the State government, he declared that such a proposition was in violation of the State constitution.

Regarding excise, he remarked:

The people of New York want much liberty in this regard, and they should have it. It has been said, however, that the present law has resulted in much vice. If that is so it is the duty of the Republican editors of the State to start a crusade, and it is for the legislature to see that such conditions are remedied.

Ex-Lieutenant Governor Woodruff advocated the fusing of the Republican organization to get control of the city at the coming election. He contended that there were not enough straight Republican voters to elect a straight Republican Mayor.

Ex-Mayor Seth Low advocated home rule in all matters pertaining to New York City.

"I think," he remarked, "that the people should shape their own policy in regard to excise. The belief which is entertained by so many thousands of our citizens that their personal liberty is infringed on has done much harm to the cause of the Republican party in this city. I believe that the voice of the people in the matter of excise as well as local affairs should be heeded and the result would be, I believe, very beneficial."

Mr. Low advocated that the legislature take action looking to an extension of the term of the Mayor of New York to four years.

J. Pierrepont Morgan, Jas. Stillman, Louis Stern and B. Aymar Sands were among the guests at the dinner.

CHAUNCEY WOLEVER

Born Oct. 20, 1842 Died Feb. 16, 1905

DIED.

The death of Chauncey Wolever last Thursday morning, caused profound sorrow to a large circle of friends and acquaintances, by whom he was held in high esteem. The deceased was taken ill with pneumonia on Tuesday evening at his home, on Broadway, and although everything was done by a loving wife and medical skill to circumvent the dread disease, the shadow fell across the threshold of the happy home on Thursday morning.

The deceased was born in Herkimer, Oct. 20, 1842, and was 62 years of age; he came with his parents to Fulton when he was five years of age and has been a resident of this place since that time. For the past fifteen years he conducted a meat market on Broadway.

On May 17, 1861, Mr. Wolever enlisted in Co. H, 24th Regiment, N. Y. S. V., and served with distinction in all the battles of the Civil War his regiment was engaged in until 1863, when he was honorably discharged from the service.

In 1865, Mr. Wolever was united in marriage with Miss Hattie Trembley, who survives him. Two children blessed the union—Frank C. and Amos Z. of this city. He is also survived by one sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Austin of Syracuse, and a brother, Zenas, of Brookfield, Mo.

The funeral services were held on Monday at 2:30 p. m. at the late home and at 3 o'clock in the First M. E. church, where he had been a consistent member for many years. The Rev. Dempster Chase of Herkimer, assisted by the Rev. John Richards, pastor of the church, conducted the last solemn rites. The members of Post Schenck, G. A. R., Women's Relief Corps, Sons of Veterans, Ladies' Auxiliary and the Order of American Mechanics attended the services in a body. A male quartette composed of Messrs. N. H. Gilbert, C. M. Allen, H. A. McFarland and B. W. Bennett, rendered appropriate music during the ceremony. Many beautiful floral gifts were received, slight tokens of loving remembrance. The remains were deposited in the receiving vault at Mount Adnah cemetery.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to return heartfelt thanks to our many friends and neighbors for the kind sympathy extended and assistance rendered during our sad bereavement in the loss of a beloved husband and father; also to the patriotic and kindred societies for the many beautiful floral gifts, and to the male quartette for the appropriate selections rendered during the service.

MRS. CHAUNCEY WOLEVER,
FRANK C. WOLEVER,
AMOS Z. WOLEVER.

The tremendous fact of death always overwhelms us, and so when the news reached Fulton on Friday that Miss Frank Lee had died in Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 14th, we were stunned, and all her friends mourned. It seemed so sudden, so unlooked for, so inexpressibly sad that she must die so far away from home and friends. We had hoped so much for her in this trip to warmer climes.

The disease was quick in its work; congestion of the lungs developed. "God's finger touched her and she slept." The tired spirit is with her Maker. We cannot wish her back to earth when we think of that bright and beautiful mansion God has prepared for all who love Him. Celia Thaxter calls death an "escape," and certainly it must be true of her, so delicately constituted as Frank Lee was. Her human happiness was a web with many threads of pain in it. She was one of the old friends, tried and true; no one doubted her loyalty to Fulton, to her home and her many friends. We shall miss her familiar face always. No one can fill her place in our hearts. She was respected by the whole community and beloved by her friends. A perfectly pure and refined atmosphere surrounded her. She had a reverence for all that was good and true; loved her church and made an earnest effort to attend its services whenever it was possible for health so to do.

Her life had been a struggle for many years, for health and strength which never came to her, but she made a strong fight to rise superior to her weakness and play her part in the drama of life. She was warmly attached to this, her native town, and dearly loved her home, where, one by one, the members of her family had all passed away, either by death or other causes, so that she was left alone. But she found much peace and enjoyment in her independent life. Truly we, as her life-long friends, will miss her; her home was one of the wayside resting places, where we were always sure of a welcome and pleasant converse.

She was closely allied to us, and strongly interested in everyone. She was a gentlewoman and tender in her nature; kindly, sympathetic and helpful to the needy. She had a liberal education and much mental ability.

Death saddens the heart of the friends who are left, but the dear ones who have passed over to the eternal shores, how free they are, unfettered, untrammeled, happy; we would not call them back if we could.

Miss Frank Lee was the daughter of Dr. M. L. Lee, a physician in Fulton for many years. She leaves one brother, Gen. A. L. Lee of New York, and one sister, Mrs. George Sanders of Springfield, Ill.

Her remains will not be brought to Fulton for burial until the early Spring.

"I have had playmates, I have had companions,
In my days of childhood, in my joyful school days;
All, all are gone! the old familiar faces.
How some they have died, and some they have left me
And some are taken from me; all are departed.
All, all are gone! the old familiar faces."

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

Sessions of Unusual Interest and Importance to Our Farmer Readers.

The Farmers Institute held in this city last Friday and Saturday was one of the best ever held in this place. The speakers were well grounded in the information they desired to impart.

Addresses of welcome were delivered by Supervisor L. D. Beardsley and Mayor George Brooker, which were responded to by the conductor.

Mr. G. F. Hallock, the local correspondent, and his assistant, Mr. William Pollard, were fortunate in securing the services of local musical talent. The list embraced Miss Elder, Miss Lelia Church, Miss Mable Hubbard and Master Ross Osborne. The Fulton High School Glee Club sang two songs on Friday afternoon which were very much enjoyed.

The session on Friday morning was well attended. In the afternoon every seat was occupied, but the deplorable condition of the roads precluded the possibility of returning to [illegible] evening session. Thus [illegible] fortunate as two of the most instructive lectures were missed. Mr. Alva Agee of Ohio gave as his subject "The New Agriculture," which practically meant "the cultivation of the boy." The speaker certainly understood some things a boy needs, and was not so far past boyhood days as to forget many of the lessons taught him at that time. It was an excellent talk to parents and all who come in close contact with the rising generation.

Mr. Van Alstyne gave a very plain and instructive discourse on "Farm Conditions in Maryland." He described different parts of the State, their natural resources, social conditions and possibilities of cultivation. As he had traversed the sections he described he throroughly understood his subject.

Matters of practical interest to farmers in this section occupied the Saturday session. The "Question Box," "Potato Culture," "Feeding Animals" "The Right use of Lime," "Drainage," "Controlling Conditions so as to Produce a Crop of Apples Each Year," were the many important and profitable subjects discussed.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

Interesting and Instructive Program Presented by Its Members.

The leaders of the Current Events Club, which met on Monday evening at the home of Dr. and Mrs. C. F. Bacon, were Miss Dugin, Mrs. H. J. Wilson and Miss Ada Wright, and the conclusion, were highly complimented by President Redhead for the excellence of the program presented. Some disappointment was expressed at the absence of Dr. Charles Doane, who was detained because of professional duties.

Mrs. E. R. Redhead, on behalf of Mrs. G. G. Chauncey, who is chairman of the Executive Committee, reported that the committee had secured the co-operation of the Timely Topics Club and were successful in obtaining assurance from Prof. Flick of Syracuse University that he would deliver his lecture, [illegible] under their auspices and for the benefit of the Public Library fund, sometime during the month of March. In the discussion which followed, preference was given to the 21st or 28th of March, and the committee was instructed to confer with the Timely Topics Club before definite action were taken regarding the date, which was left open. It was hoped that the lecture might be given in a church, but if one cannot be secured, then the City Hall will be utilized.

Mrs. H. J. Wilson was introduced by Miss Dugin, and the committee listened to a succinct history of the beef trust and the [illegible] in which the public [illegible] Supreme Court decision [illegible] of the Interstate Commerce [illegible] five to sustain [illegible] and [illegible] put forth by [illegible] transportation; [illegible] jobbers could [illegible] vessels can be [illegible] against [illegible] [illegible]

Miss [illegible] days of her [illegible] successor to Caspar [illegible] Superintendent of the [illegible] Museum of Art; the recent [illegible] at Pompeii and Herculaneum; [illegible] the discovery of a valuable painting, showing the intensity and vigor of ancient Italian art; the Peabody Educational fund; Mark Twain's open letter in the North American Review on the Copyright law; the newly appointed Legislative Librarian of Wisconsin and his multitudinous duties, formed a most instructive summary.

Miss Ada Wright called attention to the letting of the contract for the building of the Carnegie Library and the letter received by President Redhead regarding the payment of the money donated; the selection of a new State Regent, and Thomson's Compulsory Educational bill now being presented at Albany, were only a few of the many interesting subjects presented by Miss Wright, and which concluded the session.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. James Vincent on Monday evening, March 6, and the leaders will be the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle and Mr. Thomas Hunter.

A. K. A. Fraternity Debate.

A debate was held last Wednesday in the High school building by the Alpha Kappa Alpha Fraternity on the subject, "Resolved, That Frederick the Great was a greater General than Napoleon." The leader of the affirmative side was Charles Youngs and that of the negative was Richard Carr. Raymond Cooper, Homer Dennison, Grove Gilbert and Allen Benedict also took part. The debate was won by the affirmative side.

Grand Family Excursion to Syracuse.

A family excursion will be given to Syracuse next Saturday afternoon over the R. W. & O. R. R. A special train leaves Cayuga street station at 3:30 p. m. and Broadway at 3:35 o'clock, returning will leave Syracuse at 11:45 p. m. This will enable Fultonians to witness a performance by Lillian Russell, at the Welting, if they so desire. The round trip ticket will cost only 75 cents.

Catholic Fair Closed.

Good Housekeeping for March

An array of Summer cottages and little bungalows, attractively brought out with tint and color, opens the March issue of Good Housekeeping. A new department, "The business side," is a distinguishing feature, rich in suggestion and actual aid for the householder. Gustav Kobbe offers sound advice upon musical education in the home, with photographic illustrations. Children and the theatre, the advisability of allowing small children to witness theatrical performances, is considered by Mary Wood-Allen, M. D., and Elizabeth McCracken, author of The Women of America. The picture impulse in children's dress is treated brightly and helpfully by Augusta Kortrecht, with the aid of charming drawings by James Preston. Charles M. Skinner, author of Little Gardens, discourses upon A Dooryard Garden, and Isabel Gordon Curtis, the "Housekeeper-at-large," describes with pen and camera a visit with the feminine pastor of a church in a hill town of New England. The General and Carlotta, the extraordinary two-part story by Lillie Hamilton French, is concluded in this issue, and the Bride's Primer, illustrated in colors by Strothmann, is continued. There is not space here even to mention the many valuable features of the March Good Housekeeping which deal with the season's work.

STEPHENS OPERA HOUSE.

"Roanoke" A Story of Old Virginia.

Hal Reid's beautiful story of the south entitled "Roanoke," will be the attraction at the Stephens Opera House on Thursday, Feb. 23. The play will be given an elaborate production in every detail. An exceptionally capable company will interpret the several strongly drawn characters of the story and special scenic and electorial effects will impart beauty and realism to the presentation. Roanoke is a comedy drama in five acts the scenes of which are laid in and adjacent to the cities of Roanoke and Richmond, Virginia. The plot is one of powerful interest and Mr. Reid's best style. Dramatic incidents accumulate rapidly into climaxes of intense interest while a vein of delightful comedy skillfully intermingled with the principal theme relieves the seriousness of the absorbing situation and combines to provide the play goer an entertainment of rare enjoyment. Unlike all other plays of the south "Roanoke" is not a war drama; instead it tells a charming story of love and the devotion of a brother and sister who suffer financial reverses and physical afflictions upon the death of their father through the evil scheming of an unscrupulous and villianious usurer and a designing and coveteous aunt and cousin. Roanoke is said to be one of Hal Reid's greatest successes and its presentation in this city will afford amusement lovers an exceptional dramatic treat. Reserved seats on sale at Watson's drug store. Prices, 10, 20, 30 and 50 cents.

Give Your Stomach a Rest.

Your food must be properly digested and assimilated to be of any value to you. If your stomach is weak or diseased take Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. It digests what you eat and gives the stomach a rest, enabling it to recuperate, take on new life and grow strong again. Kodol cures sour stomach, gas, bloating, heart palpitation, and all digestive disorders. L. A. UNFINISHED NOVELS.

TALES THAT WERE STOPPED BY THE HAND OF DEATH.

Nathaniel Hawthorne's Foreboding About "The Dolliver Romance." The Fragment That Stevenson Left. Thackeray's Last Work.

George Gissing's "Varanilda" is a masterpiece that its author did not live to finish. One well known critic considers this tale of the Roman and the Goth the deceased writer's finest work, and, though many may question this judgment, there can exist but universal regret that the romance must forever remain incomplete.

A greater work by a greater writer, "Weir of Hermiston," by R. L. Stevenson, was left a mere fragment, of which the lurid grandeur proved that its creator was taken from us in the zenith of his power. Another romance, "St. Ives," by the same pen, was running in a monthly magazine at the time of his premature death. Here, however, readers were not balked of a satisfactory denouement, for the story was brought to a conclusion by Mr. Quiller-Couch, well known under the nom de plume of "Q."

"I hardly know what to say to the public about this abortive romance, though I pretty well know what the case will be. I shall never finish it," wrote Nathaniel Hawthorne with reference to "The Dolliver Romance," which he had undertaken to write for the Atlantic Monthly. This foreboding was but too soon verified, for the author had scarce time to do more than lay the groundwork of the story and write the initial chapters ere death struck him down.

At his funeral at Concord the scarce commenced manuscript lay upon his coffin. Soon afterward the first chapter appeared in the Atlantic, and subsequently the second chapter, which he had been unable to revise, was published in the same periodical. Several years elapsed when a third fragment, revised and copied by the novelist's wife, was placed in the publisher's hands. The original manuscript is now preserved in the Concord public library.

"Wives and Daughters" was running in the Cornhill when the authoress, Mrs. Gaskell, died. Fortunately the work was nearing its completion, so that, although it was not actually finished by the gifted writer, the plot was sufficiently advanced to enable us to make more than a shrewd guess at the ultimate fate of the characters and to take leave of the hero fully assured of his ultimate happiness.

Another serial that was being written for the same magazine when its author laid down pen forever was "Denis Duval." Thackeray, indeed, was already in his grave when its publication commenced. Three parts and a portion of a fourth were all that appeared, and "the story," wrote the editor, "breaks off as his life ended—full of vigor and blooming with new promise like the apple trees in this month of May." With the fourth part was given a set of notes, taken from Thackeray's own papers, elucidatory of the subsequent development of the plot.

Thackeray's great contemporary, Charles Dickens, died, too, in harness. For long his health had been but indifferent, but he stuck unflinchingly to the work he had in hand. On June 8, 1870, the end came. The morning and part of the afternoon of that day were devoted to completing the sixth number of "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," but scarcely had he finished work and sat down to dinner ere he was seized with a fit. From this he never recovered, but after lingering some hours, without regaining consciousness, died at 6 the next day.

"I shall publish late in this year," wrote Laurence Sterne, "and the next I shall begin a new work in four volumes, which, finished, I shall continue 'Tristram' with fresh spirit." This new work here referred to is the "Sentimental Journey," one volume alone of which was ever given to the world, nor by reason of the author's death was the immortal "Tristram Shandy" ever continued.

"Arcadia," the pastoral romance which Sir Philip Sidney composed at Wilton House, was never completed and ran no small danger of being entirely lost to future generations when its author, before his death, gave orders for its destruction.

Only about 160 manuscript pages of Benjamin Disraeli's last novel, which brought the story up to the first dozen lines of chapter 10, was all that was written when the brilliant writer laid aside his pen forever.

Denuding the Forests of the Empire State.

The destruction of our forests seem to be going on, but few people know how rapidly this work is progressing. Some computations on this subject have recently been made and the figures are startling in the extreme. For instance it is estimated by men who have looked carefully into the matter, and have taken actual results for a considerable period of time as the basis for their calculations, and it is stated as a positive fact that it takes thirty-fives acres of pulp wood land per day to furnish the paper stock for the Hearst papers alone, in New York, Boston and Chicago. Here is the basis for the statement:

Newspaper is made of 20 per cent. of sulphite pulp and 80 per cent. of ground wood pulp. One cord of wood produces 1200 pounds of sulphite pulp. One cord of wood produces 1800 pounds of ground wood pulp. The average lumber land in certain sections of the State produces ten cords of pulp wood per acre. Therefore, the ten cords produced for newspaper use, 16,800 pounds of stock, and the 300 tons divided by this equals thirty-five acres per day to supply the Hearst newspapers alone.

Of course, the Hearst publications are very much larger than most papers and use a great deal of paper—perhaps two or three times as much as some, but imagine how much lumber it is going to take for all the daily newspapers of the United States, and how few years it will be at this rate, unless something is done to check it, before practically all our forests will be used up. Think of it, thirty-five acres of land being denuded for the pulp to furnish one newspaper in New York, Boston and Chicago, for one day—From the Albany Times-Union.

It has supplanted discomfort with ease—it has banished the impossible and exaggerated figure produced by the old corset idea. It removes the strain of lacing from the sensitive parts of the body and throws all pressure upon the hips and the strong back muscles, supporting the stomach within the corset and not forcing it below the garment. The Erect Form is made in more models than ever before. There are forty distinct styles of this popular make, each meant for a distinct type of woman. Dealers in all sized towns and cities the land over, sell the Erect Form. Prices range upward from $1.

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS

The more Magazines there are, the more Indispensable is The Review of Reviews

"Indispensable." "The one magazine I feel I must take." "The world under a field-glass." "An education in public affairs and current literature."—these are some of the phrases one hears from noted people who read the Review of Reviews. The more magazines there are, the more necessary is the Review of Reviews, because it brings together the best that is in all the most important monthlies of the world. Such is the flood of periodical literature that nowadays people say that the only way to keep up with it is to read the Review of Reviews. Entirely over and above this review-ing service, it has many original matter and illustrations than most magazines, and the most timely and important articles printed in any monthly.

Probably the most useful section of all is Dr. Albert Shaw's illustrated "Progress of the World," where public events and issues are authoritatively and lucidly explained in every issue. Many a subscriber writes, "The department alone is worth more than the price of the magazine." The various cartoon departments, including current history in caricature, in foreign periodicals, in American periodicals, and in the London Punch, are unique and thoroughly characteristic features. THE LILY.

MARIAN FROELICH. HENRY ATHENS.

Dairy and Creamery

H. R. Cook, writing in National Stockman and Farmer, says:

I have been watching two heifers during the past season that were quite alike in their conformation and evident ability to give milk. Both began giving approximately the same weight of milk. One of them was carefully fed to bring out all there was in her. She steadily gained in flow, never giving over thirty-three pounds a day, but during the year made 7,200 pounds, not bad for a two-year-old. She will soon freshen again, a big, nice three-year-old ready for good work.

The other one is farrow and will probably be fitted for meat. Her milk was not weighed daily, but, as I learn it, she has not exceeded 4,000 pounds. She had no encouragement at the outset and, like a boy in bad company, has come to an inglorious end. Finely bred and well built heifers do not always trot fast from the word go. They have to learn how to score. A little coaxing and training in the way of extra feed and care give stability, and soon a developed cow comes from an unpromising heifer. The milking habit thus formed will not forsake them in after years.

A Typical Holstein-Friesian.

The Holstein-Friesian championship in the aged sire class at the St. Louis world's fair cattle show was won by Sarcastic Lad, owned by the World's Fair Holstein association and for years at the head of Gillett & Son's famous herd at Rosendale, Wis., says Holstein-Friesian Register. Sarcastic Lad has sired eleven A. R. O. daughters and five sons, who have fourteen A. R. O. daughters, and is said by experienced breeders to be a typical bull or a perfect type of the Holstein-Friesian male.

To Determine a Cow's Pregnancy.

The cow to be tested is milked separately, and as soon as possible after the milk is drawn dip a straw or timothy stem in the bucket of milk. Have a glass of pure water at hand and allow a drop of the milk to fall in the water—only one. If the milk quickly dissipates and renders the water murky the cow is not in calf, but if the milk drop sinks to the bottom of the glass before mixing with the water she is pregnant, says Kate M. Busick in Holstein-Friesian Register.

If you are not sufficiently expert, take the milk of another cow that has newly calved and pursue the same treatment with both at the same time, and you will not fail to note the difference in the way the drop of milk will mix with the water. I have practiced this method of determining pregnancy in my herd for years, and I never knew it to fail.

Feeding Milk Cows.

While we have always advocated liberal feeding for milk cows, we do not wish to be understood that all cows will do better for having a heavy grain ration, says American Cultivator. There are many that have inherited the beef making tendency from some ancestor of the Shorthorn or the Hereford blood that will persist in putting on fat if liberally fed with grain, or at least with cornmeal. Whole corn is better as a milk producing food, but the cow that insists upon growing fat instead of giving more milk when grain fed is usually best disposed of to the butcher. By proper care in proportioning her feed she may be kept in milk, but it is usually better to let her fatten and go to the butcher and fill her place with a cow that was naturally destined as a milk producer.

HE HATED MUSEUMS.

Thoreau Catalogued Them as the Catacombs of Nature.

I hate museums. There is nothing so weighs upon my spirits. They are the catacombs of nature. One green bud of spring, one willow catkin, one faint thrill from a migrating sparrow, would set the world on its legs again. The life that is in a single green weed is of more worth than all this death. They are dead nature collected by dead men. I know not whether I muse most at the bodies stuffed with cotton and sawdust or those stuffed with bowels and flashy fiber outside the cases.

Where is the proper herbarium, the true cabinet of shells and museum of skeletons, but in the meadow where the flower bloomed, by the seaside where the tide cast up the fish, and on the hills and in the valleys where the beast laid down its life and the skeleton of the traveler reposes on the grass? What right have mortals to parade these things on their legs again, with their wires, and, when heaven has decreed that they shall return to dust again, to return them to sawdust? Would you have a dried specimen of a world or a pickled one?

Embalming is a sin against heaven and earth—against heaven, who has recalled the soul and set free the servile elements, and against the earth, which is thus robbed of her dust. I have had my right perceiving senses so disturbed in these haunts as to mistake a veritable living man for a stuffed specimen and surveyed him with dumb wonder as the strangest of the whole collection, for the strangest is that which, being in many particulars most like, is in some essential particular most unlike.—Thoreau's Journal in Atlantic.

A Quick Witted Waiter.

A western congressman says that while he and certain friends were studying the bill of fare in a hotel on the New Jersey coast a mosquito alighted on the card. It instantly lost its life by a quick blow from the man holding the card, its little carcass remaining on the bill. With a smile the man pointed to the remains and said to the waiter:

"Do you serve these on toast here?"

"They're on the bill, sir!" was the witty retort of the waiter.

The Great Difficulty.

"One-half of the world's happiness is solved when a person learns to mind his own business."

"Yes, but it's the other half that causes the most trouble."

"What's that?"

"Getting other people to mind theirs!"—Detroit Free Press.

His Peril.

"Is your husband a criminal lawyer?"

"Mercy, no! But he has to associate so much with those awful men he defends that really I'm sometimes afraid he soon will be."—Cleveland Leader.

Good Preventive Anyway.

"Doctor, isn't there anything I can do for this seasickness?"

"Why, yes. Try farming."—Life.

Credulity is the man's weakness, but the child's strength.—Lamb.

It is authoritatively reported that Russia has accepted Japan's terms of peace, which are as follows:

Corea to be placed under Japanese suzerainty.

Statue of Frances Willard.

A special feature last Friday in the Senate and House at Washington, D. C., was the acceptance of the statue of Frances E. Willard, the distinguished temperance advocate, which has been placed in Statuary Hall in the national Capitol by the State of Illinois. The statue of Miss Willard is the first of a woman to find a place in the hall, and the members of her sex showed their appreciation of the compliment by turning out in large numbers to listen to the eulogistic addresses.

Addresses eulogistic of Miss Willard were made in the Senate by Messrs. Cullom, Beveridge, Dolliver and Hopkins. On motion of Mr. Cullom the statue was accepted. At the close of the ceremony, at 4:39 p. m., the Senate, as a further mark of respect to Miss Willard's memory, adjourned until Saturday.

At 4 o'clock legislative business was suspended in the House and the exercises began for the reception and acceptance from the State of Illinois of the statue of Frances E. Willard in Statuary Hall. Many women and children, mostly girls, thronged the House corridors during the day, passing out into the hall to view the statue. The galleries were packed.

The proceedings were opened by the reading of a letter from Governor Deneen of Illinois, presenting the statue to the United States. Mr. Foss (Ill.) offered a resolution of acceptance, providing its adoption speeches extolling the life and deeds of Miss Willard were delivered by Messrs. Deafness Cannot be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which it nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Mother Gray's Letter.

Mother Gray's letter to boys in the service of the "Golden Flood," which figures the foundation of the Bankers' Trust, in the March installment of this Wall street mystery story now running in McClure's, "The richest man in the world," and the president of the great Metropolitan Building Bank conclude that the young chemist is making the gold which he puts into the bank's vaults at the rate of $11,000,000 a week.

Their spies report that nothing goes into his laboratory and gold chunks out. Is his bullion the product of an electro-chemical process? The reader, like "the richest man in the world," can reach no other conclusion. Disaster is impending, the greatest panic the world has ever seen. With gold about to tumble to the price of pig-iron the magnates in the secret make mad haste to get from under. They throw their gold bonds on the market and—. The reader scents with an expectant thrill the bursting of the storm. The "Golden Flood" is the best mystery story of the year.

THE VALUE OF EXAMPLE.

To have your child truthful, be truthful.

To have him temperate, be temperate in all things.

To have him kind to others, be yourself kind to others.

Prescribe healthful amusements and so far as you can take part in them.

Prove to him by your life that a good name is to be chosen before great riches.

Teach him that riches are not to be despised, but should never be got by doing harm to others; that when acquired should be treated as a trust, not as a hoard.

To have him honest, present to him in yourself a living example of honesty. The chief part of a child's knowledge comes through observation. Acts mean more to him than speech.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Demonstration.

Tommy and his little brother had been playing together most peacefully for some time when suddenly the baby gave a howl, followed by a series of shrieks. The mother rushed in and, while soothing the crying child, sought to find out what had hurt him. Tommy resisted her cross examination for a time, but finally admitted that he was guilty.

"What did you do to him?" she asked.

"I stuck him with a safety pin."

"What in the world did you do that for?"

"Nurse said you couldn't hurt yourself with a safety pin, and I wanted to see if it was so."

Lincoln's Retort to Douglas.

Douglas, meeting Lincoln on one occasion during the exciting campaign of 1860, made a characteristically unpleasant remark, saying:

"Why, Abe, I remember you when you were nothing but a young clerk in a little western town, peddling out goods at retail and selling liquor over the counter."

"Yes," answered Lincoln, "the only difference between you and me was that I was on one side of the counter and you were on the other."

The Era of Noise.

What an age of noise this is! Do you know any single human being who is capable of being silent for an hour at a stretch? I know two, and I value them according to their rarity. Not only does everybody talk, but almost everybody talks loud. I went into a shop the other day, and the clatter of conversation sounded as though the place were full of people. Yet all the noise was produced by three individuals. Why should they shout?—London Truth.

The Classes In England.

In England the upper class gambles, but does not drink; the middle class drinks, but does not gamble, and the lower class both drinks and gambles. It is a characteristic circumstance that the upper class makes laws to prevent the lower class from gambling and that the lower class is in favor of legislation to prevent the upper class from drinking.

President Roosevelt's Inauguration

THE residents of the District of Columbia expect that about 200,000 people will journey to Washington to take part in the inauguration of President Roosevelt on Saturday, March 4, or witness that function and the spectacles to be seen in connection with it. They are doing all that they can to make the inauguration of Mr. Roosevelt dignified, impressive and in every way notable. Seven thousand railway coaches will convey the visitors to the national capital. The parade which the president will review, after taking the oath of office and returning to the White House, will be the most showy and picturesque of any procession that ever wended its way by the threshold of the executive mansion. The inaugural ball will be especially brilliant, as a splendid scheme of decoration and lighting has been planned for the great court of the pension building, where the affair will take place.

On inauguration day the people of Washington invite the people of the country at large to be their guests. Of course they do not offer them free board and lodging during the period of their stay—it would scarcely be reasonable to expect that. But they get up an interesting display of soldiers, marines, diplomats in gorgeous uniforms, generals and colonels in a plethora of gold lace, fireworks, beautiful women in their best ball gowns and, in the coming instance at least, wild Indians and cowboys from the reservations and ranches of the west. To carry out this elaborate programme costs from $60,000 to $100,000, and to defray the expense the residents of the District raise a guarantee fund. A large sum is realized from tickets of admission to the inaugural ball and supper, while grand stand and souvenir concessions form another source of revenue.

The various functions connected with installing the president in office are the outgrowth of custom, and the government in its official capacity makes no provision for them. The most that congress does is to appropriate $10,000 for the maintenance of good order and give the use of the pension office for the inaugural ball. The central feature of the day's ceremonies, the taking of the oath of office and delivery of the inaugural address, remains a simple affair, but the accessories of this function have grown in number and elaborateness with passing years.

The chairman of the committee which has charge of the arrangements for Mr. Roosevelt's inauguration is Brigadier General John M. Wilson, U. S. A., retired. He is assisted by a corps of clerks and various subcommittees in carrying out the numerous details which must be properly attended to that the occasion may be a success. He has appointed as grand marshal of the day the lieutenant general of the army, Adna R. Chaffee. General George H. Harries of the District of Columbia will command the national guard organizations in the parade, and the civic organizations will be led by B. H. Warner of Washington.

While many impressive spectacles are connected with inauguration day, the center of all interest, the cynosure of all eyes, is the chief magistrate himself, who on this day assumes the obligation of upholding the constitution and guarding the interests of the republic. He appears first when he leaves the White House to drive to the capitol. On arrival there he goes to the east front, where the oath of office is administered by the chief justice of the supreme court, Melville W. Fuller, wearing his silken robe. Here he delivers his inaugural address. After this he enters his carriage and returns to the executive mansion, followed by the organizations participating in the parade. After a short period of repose he takes his position in the reviewing stand at the White House and greets the thousands of admiring fellow citizens of the various marching organizations who pass before him. On the conclusion of this rather arduous task he takes a period of rest and in the evening makes his final appearance for the day at the pension building, where he opens the inaugural ball. Such is the programme which custom has prescribed for the president on the day he assumes his high office. From the time when he rises to begin the eventful day to the time when he appears at the inaugural ball with his accomplished wife, the first lady of the land, the constant nervous strain will prove wearing even to one whose athletic habits render him more capable of enduring fatigue than most of his predecessors. The closing scene of the day will be one calculated to dazzle those unaccustomed to social events on a scale of such magnificence. When the president and Mrs. Roosevelt proceed to the platform erected for them in the great court of the pension building and the signal is given for the gayety to begin they will look out upon a sea of faces, an array of resplendent uniforms and elaborate toilets and an assemblage of distinguished personages.

The lighting of this great scene will be accomplished by means of electric lamps blazing from almost every foot of space on the walls and ceilings in colors of crimson, green and gold. Floral and flag decorations will be elaborate. Formerly it was the custom for the president and his wife and the vice president and his wife to make the circle of the court in opening the ball, but this practice led to such a crush that it will be discontinued at the next ball, and the presidential party will simply be escorted to their places on the platform. As the function occurs on Saturday evening dancing will stop at 12 o'clock. No intoxicating fluids will be dispensed in connection with it, and so far as the ball itself or its adjuncts are concerned no one attending it will have any excuse for possessing a "big head" the next morning. Tickets of admission to the ball will be $5 each. Carriages for the evening will be not less than $10 each. Twenty dollars will represent the minimum expense to a man who takes his wife to the ball, and this does not include supper or the ball gown. Several concerts will be given in the pension building following inauguration day. The receipts from the ball, concerts, supper, etc., four years ago were over $60,000.

BRIG. GEN. JOHN M. WILSON.

The government is under no direct expense for these affairs, as in the case of social functions at monarchial courts abroad. They are got up by the residents of the capital, and those who go pay their way. Of course the large majority of those who attend the inauguration do not see the inside of the pension building at this time, but they see the imposing inauguration parade and in the evening the grand display of fireworks from the Washington monument grounds. In the parade this year will be some 5,000 soldiers of the regular army and marines from the navy and at least 10,000 national guardsmen from various states. The president's escort will be composed of Squadron A of New York, which was his escort when he was inaugurated governor of New York, and a delegation from his old regiment of rough riders. The latter will be in khaki uniforms, blue shirts and slouch hats. Many civic organizations will be in line. There will be a number of Indian chiefs in the parade, including Geronimo, the Apache, and Sioux, Comanche and Blackfeet warriors, together with 850 students from the Carlisle Indian school, will add picturesqueness to the pageant. Another wild west feature will be the band of "cow punchers" who are to attend the inauguration under command of Captain Seth Bullock, the famous scout and former marshal of Deadwood. They will grace the procession in compliment to President Roosevelt, who was once a cowboy himself. Bullock used to be the terror of the bad men in the days when the Deadwood section abounded in them. He has visited the president several times and talked over the days when Mr. Roosevelt was a ranchman and Bullock was rounding up cattle rustlers. It was this same Seth who went to a musicale at the White House one day at the president's request. He gazed absently out of the windows for a time while somebody played a sonata on the piano. It was just a bit classic for cowboy ears. Presently Mr. Roosevelt happened along. "How do you like the music, Seth?" he inquired.

"The captain shifted his quid. "It's a little too far up the gulch for me, Mr. President," he replied.

MILK AERATION.

Reports [illegible] Notes From the Agricultural College of the Fair.

Those [illegible] micro organisms [illegible] hairs of animals are [illegible] baneful influence they [illegible] the changes in milk. [illegible] may have on its surface [illegible] 2,000 or 3,000 micro organ[illegible] hair almost any numbe[illegible]. A dirty hair, therefore, [illegible] milk may provide micro[illegible] by the thousand or by the [illegible]. If the milk is strained and the hair kept on the strainer, the micro organisms go through just the same, and the surface of the hair is simply washed off. If, accordingly, a milker permits a dozen or two hairs to enter the pail during the course of milking it means that probably millions of micro organisms have been introduced into the milk.

Any one at all familiar with the stable is familiar with the character of the dirt on the surface of a hair. There are the micro organisms which may cause trouble and are usually capable of producing a variety of changes in milk. They may produce taints or fermentations of any kind.

In order, therefore, to eliminate micro organisms from this source it may be necessary to groom the cow thoroughly or to clip the hair on her udder. If the cow is kept clean and is thoroughly groomed the necessity for clipping is not so great. Further, by dampening the udder during the milking process the hair may be made to adhere so that it will not fall into the milk.—C. E. Marshall in Michigan Experiment Station Bulletin.

Ripening Cream.

No part of the buttermaking is of more importance than the ripening of the cream. In winter it is frequently attended with considerable difficulty, as few farm houses are provided with conveniences for maintaining even temperature, says Hoard's Dairyman.

Where there are several fresh cows in the herd cream ripens better, with less danger of introducing harmful bacteria. Fresh buttermilk in such cases usually furnishes a starter sufficient for all practical purposes. Save out a couple of quarts each time and stir this thoroughly through the cream twenty-four hours before churning.

Building Up the Dairy Herd.

From the first crop of calves from common cows retain the heifers from the best cows or, better still, keep all the heifers, says Holstein-Friesian Register. When these heifers are fifteen to eighteen months old breed them to their sire. Inbreeding to this extent may be safely followed under any circumstances. When these heifers drop their calves give them special care. Remember that you will be disappointed if the majority of them do not develop into better cows than their dams.

Whitewash the Stable.

Stables are now whitewashed quicker and much more effectively with spray pumps than with a brush, and whitewash is, of course, the cheapest disinfectant known, says Hoard's Dairyman. A bushel of unslacked lime will make thirty gallons of whitewash. The lime should be used before it is air slacked. It should be thoroughly slacked with water, used while fresh and if a spray is used strained through a fine wire screen or cloth.

CARE OF MILK CATTLE

All dairy cows should go into the stable at night as soon as the first frost makes it appearance on the ground, and from Dec. 1 until the frost is almost clear of the ground in the spring they should not be let out at all. The farmer would be money in pocket by following this plan. By eating good food and converting it into milk a cow would get sufficient exercise. A cow giving milk will drink water about a dozen times a day and therefore should have water constantly before her.

Before the Cow Calves.

For three weeks before a cow begins to give milk she should have no cornmeal. This is heating and tends to bring on milk fever. A day or two before new milk comes give the cow a dose of physic, such as epsom salts.—Farm Journal.

The Cow Tie-up.

There are a few essential points in the construction of a tie-up. First, sunshine all day; second, water in the tie-up or in a room connected, so the cows will not have to go out in the open air to get it; third, plenty of ventilation in front of the cows, the rear will take care of itself; fourth, it should be so constructed that the cows can be kept clean with the least expense of labor, and, fifth, the cows should be so tied that they will have the largest amount of latitude and still be tied.—Cor. American Cultivator.

Rations For the Cow.

The dairy cow has a very large storage capacity, can use a great amount of roughness, and the character of this roughness must be taken into account before we determine with what kind of a ration we must balance it up. Only in special cases do you need to give more than eight pounds of concentrates per thousand pounds of cow per day, and you can get very good results with even less than that.

Drying Off Cows.

Some cows cannot be dried off before calving, but most of them can be, says American Cultivator. If a cow is hard to dry off reduce her feed. In milking skip one teat today, another tomorrow, then half the udder another day and so on. If any feed remains in the feed box after feeding it should be removed at once. If fresh food is placed on partially consumed food cows lose their appetite for all the food.

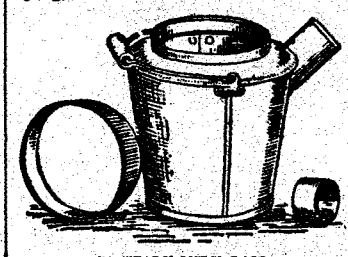
Notice to Creditors.

In pursuance of an order of Hiram E. Sickley, Surrogate of the county of Oswego, New York, dated on January 27th, 1905, notice is hereby given to all persons having claims against the estate of Andrew G. Mayne, late of the Town of Volney in said County, deceased, that they are required to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber at his residence in the Town of Volney, in the County of Oswego, New York, on or before the 15th day of April, 1905.

Dated this 15th day of October, A. D., 1904.

MARGARET L. MAYNE,
Executrix.

In a bulletin recently issued by the Michigan experiment station John Michels, instructor in dairying, department of agriculture, says of the care of dairy utensils:



A room for the purpose of washing the dairy utensils is a very important part of the equipment. It should be provided with shelves, some good washing substance, as sal soda, hot and cold water and if possible steam. The shelves should be placed near a large window where the tinware is exposed to the disinfecting action of the sunlight. The cleaning of dairy utensils is best conducted as follows:

First, rinse with warm or perhaps preferably cold water. Never use boiling or hot water at first or the milk will become cemented to the utensil. Second, scrub with moderately hot water containing some sal soda. The washing should be done with brushes rather than cloth because the bristles enter into any crevices present which the cloth cannot possibly reach. Furthermore, it is very difficult to keep the cloth clean. Third, scald thoroughly with steam or hot water after rinsing out the water in which the sal soda was used. After scalding the utensils should be inverted on the shelves without wiping and allowed to remain in this place until ready to use. This will leave the vessels in a practically sterile condition. Fourth, if it is possible to turn the inside of the vessels to the sun in a place where there is no dust, then it is desirable to expose the utensils during the day to the strong germicidal action of the direct sun's rays.

In washing strainers or cloths used for straining care should be exercised in placing these in boiling water a few minutes after thorough cleaning. From the boiling water they are spread out to dry in a clean and dustless place.

The Sanitary Milk Pail.

The sanitary milk pail here reproduced from bulletin No. 22 of the Michigan experiment station is provided with a spout which permits ready emptying, and it will also be noticed that it is covered with a cap during the process of milking. The cap is shown at the right. The ring at the left fastens the strainer, which should consist of a double layer of cheesecloth inclosing a layer of absorbent cotton. The purpose of the cotton is to retain fine hairs and any particles of dirt that are not dissolved by the milk. It should be renewed at each milking. The value of a partially closed pail is evidenced by the reduced surface, which has a tendency to keep out many of the micro organisms which would otherwise drop into the pail during milking. To illustrate, a half closed top would have the effect of reducing the contamination from this source about 50 per cent.

SANITARY MILK PAIL.

It is well to say in this connection that there are many objections to the so called sanitary milk pail. It without doubt reduces the contamination when the contamination occurs, but when cleanliness is rigorously practiced no doubt the disadvantages exceed the benefits. However, many of our best dairymen use it continually.

The Dairy Cow's Feed.

With a view to getting the most out of the dairy cow a good, sensible system must be followed in feeding. Proper feeding must begin with the calf and continue right through her life. If the calf is not a promising one it is better to dispose of her and devote the attention to others. If she is worth rearing for the dairy she is worth all the attention that can be bestowed upon her. That is the theory we must go on.

The calf should be growing steadily so that at two years she is ready to begin her life work. If allowed to go beyond this period she will use the food given to her to lay on fat. This is not desirable. The dairyman must fight against this continually.

The Clean Barnyard.

A clean, well drained barnyard is an essential factor in the production of sanitary milk, for where cows are obliged to wade in mire and filth it is easy to foretell what the quality of the milk will be. In order to secure a good barnyard the slope should be away from the stable or at least not toward the stable, and it should be covered with gravel or cinders. If the manure is not taken directly from the stables to the fields, it should be placed where the cows cannot have access to it.—Professor John Michels.

NERVES CURED.

Nothing Helped Until Dr. Kennedy's NEW Medicine, Cal-cura Solvent, Was Taken.

"I very much wish," writes Loretta J. Vail, of Hopewell Junction, N. Y., that I might be able in a few lines, without putting myself forward, to let the people understand how valuable Cal-cura Solvent, the new medicine discovered by Dr. David Kennedy, is in cases of indigestion and the like ailments, which are so common among us. I suffered from a severe variety of liver complaint, with dizziness, numbness, and an exceedingly weak and excitable state of the nerves. I employed the best treatment within my reach, yet nothing really helped until I began to use Cal-cura Solvent, and that did." All druggists, $1.00.

Aberdeen-Angus In the Dairy.

In Australia the Aberdeen-Angus cows are highly esteemed for dairy purposes. A correspondent, writing to a Scotch exchange, says that pure bred heifers are not to be had in sufficient numbers and that breeders are mating the Angus bull with Ayrshire cows to obtain good milkers. At the royal show at Sydney in 1902 a cow of this cross was champion in the dairy test and gave in three days 134.14 pounds of milk, yielding 6.95 pounds of butter fat.

Silage as a Milk Food.

In a test conducted by the Ohio experiment station two rations were fed, carrying practically the same amount of dry matter. In one ration over 50 per cent of this dry matter was derived from silage, and less than 18 per cent was derived from grain.

In the other ration over 57 per cent of the dry matter was derived from grain, no silage being fed.

Ten cows, representing five different breeds, were fed these rations from two to four months, five cows taking the test the full four months.

The cows fed the silage ration produced 96.7 pounds of milk and 5.08 pounds of butter fat per hundred pounds of dry matter.

The cows fed the grain ration produced 81.3 pounds of milk and 3.9 pounds of butter fat per hundred pounds of dry matter.

The average net profit per cow per month over cost of feed was $5.864 with the silage ration and $2.465 with the grain ration.

The Squirrel.

A squirrel's natural term of life is from fifteen to twenty years, and in localities where they are little disturbed they multiply with extreme rapidity. Indeed, in the early history of the United States they were so numerous in certain localities as to be almost a plague, and large sums were annually paid in bounty for the scalps. In the west large hunts were organized by the early settlers in order to try to reduce their numbers, as now it is found necessary to do to prevent the jack rabbits from becoming a scourge to the farmers. On these hunts thousands of squirrels wer killed, and yet from all accounts their numbers were not greatly reduced.

This distressing ailment results from a disordered condition of the stomach. All that is needed to effect a cure is a dose or two of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. THE VALUE OF OPALS.

It Mainly Depends on the Colors Shown in the Stones.

Veins of opals are usually met with in soft formations where nothing above ground indicates their presence. The search for them, therefore, often requires considerable time. But it is not extremely difficult, for opals are generally found near the surface. Indeed, it was thought for a long time that they were not to be found as deep as twelve feet below the surface. This opinion has, however, given way in the light of evidence, because opals of great value have been discovered at a depth of fifty feet.

The value of opals depends upon several considerations, of which the principal one is the color. It is important that they should be bright and not present streaks or spots alternating with uncolored substance. The most valuable are those which have red fires or mixtures of red and yellow, blue and green. Opals of a single tint are of little value unless the tint is particularly striking and the figure beautiful. Indeed one of the essential qualities of the opal is the arrangement of the figure, which sets off strikingly the hue of the stone.

When the figure is quite regular and distinct it is the more valuable, much less so when the grain is quite small and irregular. Sometimes the color appears as a single blaze or with figures regularly spaced. It may then be of a fine ruby red and is much sought after, but oftenest the uniform tint is only green or reddish and has but little brilliancy.

The cutting is very important for the opal. Thus a thick stone will be much less beautiful than a thin stone, which, on losing part of its volume, loses also the figure. The foundation tint contributes much to the beauty. It ought to be transparent, slightly milky and harmonize fully with the different reflections of the opal, which, when it is really beautiful, presents a variety of hues infinitely pleasing to the eye.—Jewelers' Circular-Weekly.

Startling But True.

People the world over were horrified on learning of the burning of a Chicago theatre in which nearly six hundred people lost their lives, yet more than five times this number or over 3,000 people died from pneumonia during the same year, with scarcely a passing notice. Everyone of these cases resulted from a cold and could have been prevented by the timely use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. A great many who had every reason to fear pneumonia have warded it off by the prompt use of this remedy. The following is an instance of this sort: Too much cannot be said in favor of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and especially for colds and influenza. SUFFERED FOR THE PEOPLE

Mme. Breshkovsky, Russian Patriot Who Was a Siberian Exile.

The experiences of Mme. Catherine Breshkovsky, who has come from Russia to the United States in the interest of the Russian revolutionary movement, make a story of adventure and hardship rarely equaled even in the pages of fiction. She belongs to a noble family and was cradled in luxury. Becoming interested in improving the condition of the peasant class when a young woman, she taught in schools established for their education, but she soon saw that they needed bread even more than education and possessed so little land that it was impossible for them to make a living.

She dreamed of going to America or Africa in search of gold mines, hoping thus to obtain wealth with which to aid them. But her family opposed this. She then engaged in work for the relief and education of the peasantry, and she and others who labored with her fell under suspicion of the government. Mme. Breshkovsky and 2,000 others were arrested. About 1,000 of these were imprisoned. Some 300 were detained for trial, and of these 100 died because of the ill treatment they received while in prison awaiting determination of their fate. Mme. Breshkovsky was sentenced to work in the gold mines of Siberia, a coincidence full of irony in view of the fact that it had been her dream to become rich through gold mines in order to help the peasants. Before her sentence she was kept for a long time in the "black hole," a pit, damp and without light. On the journey of 5,000 miles to the prison to which she was committed in Siberia she experienced many horrors.

Mme. Breshkovsky seeks to arouse the interest of the American people in the condition of the poorer classes in Russia and to secure aid in creating sentiment outside of Russia against the governmental abuses which exist under the rule of bureaucracy.

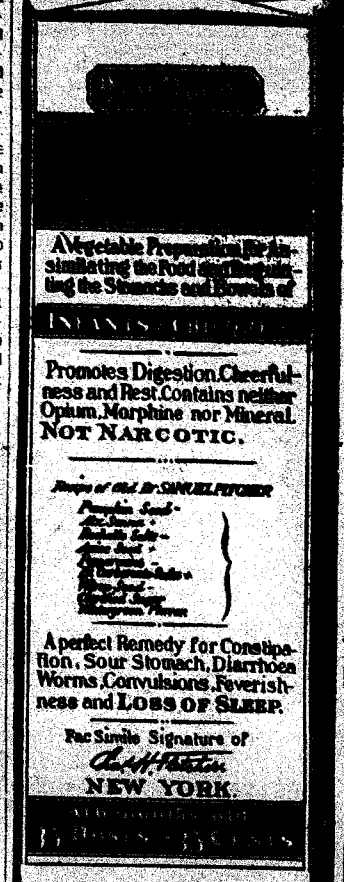
some years he was supervising immigrant inspector for the United States at Montreal. He was born at Alfreton, Derbyshire, England, in 1858 and attended the British common schools, but at an early age went to work in the coal mines. While still a boy he emigrated to the United States and in time paid for the passage across the Atlantic of father, mother, brothers and sisters, one by one. He worked in the coal mines in this country and became prominent in the Knights of Labor and afterward in the United Mine Workers. He was appointed a factory inspector in Pennsylvania and later entered the immigration service, rising from one position of importance to another. Commissioner Watchorn has never forgotten the days when he was himself an immigrant. His first experience on landing in New York was not encouraging. Stepping up to a fruit stand near the Battery, he asked for a couple of the red cheeked apples and handed $1 over the counter. The man in charge slipped the money into the cash drawer and went on with work behind the counter.



"My change!" exclaimed Watchorn.

"You get no change," replied the fruiterer.

"Do you charge $1 for two apples?"

"Go on about your business!" commanded the man. "There's no change due you!"

"If you'll come out from behind that counter I'll punch your 'ead!" roared Watchorn. But the man didn't accept the invitation, and Watchorn is still waiting for his change.

Here is a pen portrait of Robert Louis Stevenson, written by Dr. Alexander H. Head of fine type, carried well on the shoulders, and, in walking, with the impression of being a little thrown back; long brown hair, falling from under a broadish brimmed Spanish form of soft felt hat, Rembrandtesque; loose kind of Iverness cape when walking and invariable velvet jacket inside the house."

RICHARD MANSFIELD.

HE stage doors of the playhouses in which Richard Mansfield and Ada Rehan were appearing in Boston opened on the same street, and the two players met one morning while Mr. Mansfield was hurrying to a rehearsal of "Ivan the Terrible."

"How I should like to see your portrayal of Shylock!" remarked Miss Rehan. "I have wanted for a long time to get your conception of the part, but never found an opportunity to do so."

"Come in when I play 'The Merchant of Venice' tomorrow evening," suggested Mr. Mansfield.

"How can I? My acting will keep me busy."

"Would you like to see me act the part now?" asked Mr. Mansfield. Miss Rehan, somewhat surprised, replied in the affirmative. The actor led her to the stage of the theater, where his company had gathered.

"I will defer the rehearsal of 'Ivan the Terrible' until this afternoon," said Mr. Mansfield. "We will play 'The Merchant of Venice' this morning for Miss Rehan."

Thus Shakespeare's comedy was performed in its entirety during the morning, with the distinguished actress as an audience of one.

One night Fritzi Scheff gave a party to a few intimates in her apartments. Among the performers were two negro singers who are prominent in vaudeville. They had no idea of the identity of the hostess of the evening. Their ragtime selections made a great hit with the party, which included Maxine Elliott, Ethel Barrymore and Cosmo Gordon Lennox. Miss Scheff suggested that she would like to hear the Pierrot song in the second act of "Babette" syncopated. But the negroes had not heard it. So she sat down at the piano and sang it. The eyes of the colored men expressed some amusement as well as delight at the beautiful voice of the prima donna. After Miss Scheff had sung the number two or three times they reproduced it in ragtime with happy effect. Then the party went on. At the close of the vaudeville entertainment, when the ragtime men were leaving, one of them whispered to Miss Scheff's husband, Baron von Bardeleben: "Say, mister, that wife of yours is all right. If she had her voice cultivated she would be good enough for the stage."

FRITZI SCHEFF.

Maclyn Arbuckle of Henry W. Savage's "The County Chairman" company has played many parts during his career on the stage and has ranged from Hamlet down to musical comedy of the slap stick variety. At one time he essayed the part of a lovelorn tenor in an opera company. A certain high note was quite beyond the reach of Arbuckle, and after several ineffectual efforts to reach it during rehearsal the conductor glared at him and said, "Arbuckle, after this when you come to that note I guess you had better dance it."

"Things that actually occur on the stage are often more ludicrous and startling than the invented incidents of the press agents," said James Young, who is appearing with Miss Viola Allen as Sebastian in "Twelfth Night" and as Florizel in "The Winter's Tale." "I was playing a Shakespearean repertoire throughout the south and received an offer of a guarantee to put on 'Hamlet' at the little town of Crisfield, on the eastern shore of Maryland. The theater in Crisfield was not a theater, but a long, narrow hall with a platform at one end for us and rows of benches for the audience. We could use no scenery, but there was certain business of the play that demanded some kind of preparation—namely, the burial of Ophelia. There was no trap through which to lower her, and yet she must be [illegible] permission was obtained from the manager to saw out [illegible] of the stage for the purpose of [illegible] After this was [illegible] that it was twelve feet [illegible] but this difficulty [illegible] piling any [illegible] the stage to form a [illegible] box of dirt, the [illegible] placed in position [illegible] performance. JAMES YOUNG.

Sir Henry Irving, at a reception that was tendered to him in Philadelphia by a literary club, narrated some of the memories of his youth.

"My barnstorming days," he said, "seem very distant, and yet very dear to me now. I recall with particular pleasure a melodrama of crime in high life wherewith I barnstormed the provinces for two successful seasons a long time ago.

"My part called in the first act for a dark stage. In this darkness I fought with an old earl, threw him heavily, and, when he did not rise after the loud thud of his fall, I cried out:

"'Great heavens, what have I done?'

"Usually this scene impressed and moved my audience tremendously, but I remember one night in Birmingham when a coster with one little witticism turned my outcry and the darkness and the old earl's tragic fall into ridicule and laughter. I have never seen that coster, but I remember his voice well. It was a slow, dry voice, like Mark Twain's, and it manifested itself just after the fall of my aged and noble antagonist. The old earl had dropped heavily, and in the silent obscurity I had cried, 'Great heavens, what have I done?' when the coster spoke up:

"'Strike a light, young fellow, and we'll have a look.'"

HENRY IRVING.

Francis Wilson, whose new "Cousin Billy," by Clyde Fitch, is a success in New York, says that Maurice Barrymore once made the rounds of the offices of the theatrical managers in London trying to get them to put on a new play that Barrymore himself had written. One of the managers to whom Barrymore had read the play seemed much impressed. Before their interview had ended, says Harper's Weekly, it had been decided to give the piece an early production and to have Barrymore "do" the leading role. About a week after what Barrymore had supposed was the definitely agreed upon arrangement had been reached the actor received a note from the manager asking him to call. When Barrymore responded to the summons the manager said:

"I like the play, old fellow, and I'm going to give it a fine production; but, really, I don't see how I can use you in the cast. Your beastly American accent won't do at all, you know. They don't like it here."

"That's odd," said Barrymore. "They tell me on the other side that I won't do on account of my beastly English accent. What on earth am I to do—give recitations on the transatlantic steamers?"

FRANCIS WILSON.

Tody Hamilton, the circus man, tells a story about an English show which had been playing to poor business. Finally the performers, with a tumbler named Zeno at their head, went to the management and insisted on receiving their back pay. They were put off repeatedly. A definite date was at last promised, but the time arrived, and still there was no money. Zeno expostulated, whereupon the management explained that it had begun to pay salaries, commencing with the names beginning with A, and so on, but that the money had run out somewhere in the S's. The company walked home.

A year later Zeno appeared at the offices of the circus and asked for an engagement.

"Certainly," said the manager. "We will take you on at an increased salary. Now let me enter your name. Mr. Zeno, is it not?"

"One moment," said the performer. "This year my name is Ajax."

Bruce McRae, the English actor, who is Ethel Barrymore's leading man in her new play, "Sunday," tells a story about an Irishman's experience in a theater fire. When the fire was first discovered Pat was up in the scene loft. He yelled "Fire!" then opened a window and went out over the alley, hand over hand on an electric wire. FULTON'S CARNEGIE LIBRARY BUILDING

It Will Cost $15,000—Corner Stone will Be Laid in May and Building will Be Ready for Occupancy Sept. 1.

The foregoing is an excellent illustration of the new Carnegie Library building designed by Prof. Frederick Revels and Associate Prof. Earl Hallenbeck of the Architecture Department of the John Crouse College of Fine Arts, Syracuse University. The plans and specifications have been completed and the contract for the construction of the entire building let to D. E. Wadsworth of this city, who has sublet the masonry work to E. J. Carver.

It is now thought by President Redhead of the Library Association that the corner-stone of the building will be ready for laying during May, in which will be placed a complete history of the project, along with a list of all who have contributed toward the purchase of the site, furnishings, etc. It is also believed the building will be ready for occupancy by Sept. 1 of this year.

The architects were confronted with a difficult problem in designing the library building, as the site most advantageous from every view point was unusual in its layout, but Messrs. Revels and Hollenbeck have solved the problem in so able a manner that the disadvantages have been utilized and the site for the structure has become ideal.

The building proper above the fronting grade will be constructed upon a Gouverneur marble foundation. The steps and blocks will also be of Gouverneur marble. A litholite water table will surmount the foundation, and the body of the building will be of buff brick with trimmings of litholite.

The structure will front on South First street and will be raised in the center of the lot, 120 feet front by 60 feet deep. The main floor will be occupied by the stack room, delivery room, reading, children's, cloak and toilet rooms. A large tiled vestibule will add ts the beauty of the interior. The rooms will be finished in quartered red oak and all of the floors will be of oak.

Entrance to the assembly room will be through the main vestibule.

In the basement will be a large assembly hall with a seating capacity of 300, a receiving and work room and a historical room, finished in oak. In the sub-basement will be the heating plant.

The building will be heated by steam and lighted by gas and electricity.

The officers and trustees of the library are as follows:

President, E. R. Redhead.

Treasurer, Arvin Rice.

Trustees: Thomas Hunter, A. J. Snow and Prof. B. G. Clapp.

Hon. P. W. Cullinan Seeks Nomination to Succeed Hon. M. L. Wright—Dignified Appeal to the Electors.

The Hon. P. W. Cullinan, State Commissioner of Excise, announces his candidacy for the Republican nomination for Justice in the Fifth Judicial District, to succeed the Hon. M. L. Wright of Oswego, whose term expires this year.

Mr. Cullinan's unquestioned ability to discharge the duties of the office is conceded by the bench and bar, not only of this district, but of the State. He is an attorney who has had wide experience in the courts; is well grounded in law, and a gentleman of excellent judicial ability.

In announcing his candidacy Mr. Cullinan states:

"In view of the favorable expressions I have received since my name has been mentioned in connection with the election of a justice of the Supreme Court, at the approaching general election, I have concluded to be a candidate.

"The office is one of great honor and to which the members of the legal profession may laudably aspire.

"The appeal to the people for their support should be conducted with dignity, and whoever the candidates may be in this county, I trust that the canvass may be prosecuted on so high a level that the result will not reflect unfavorably upon the successful aspirant, produce a nominee whose qualifications are open to criticism, or jeopardize the assurances extended by other counties, that there is no disposition on their part to deprive Oswego county of the office, if we present a competent person as a candidate."

No reflection can be cast on the ability as a jurist of the Hon. M. L. Wright, who is seeking a renomination. He has made an excellent record on the bench, but unquestionably the position is one to which any eminent attorney may aspire. It is a matter of record, too, that when Justice Wright was nominated fourteen years ago in the Judicial Convention at Fulton overtures were made to Mr. Cullinan by delegates to permit the use of his name as a candidate, but Mr. Cullinan protested, declaring in an emphatic manner that he was pledged to Mr. Wright and would consider it unpatriotic for him to consent to become a candidate.

STEPHENS OPERA HOUSE.

"The Moonshiner's Daughter" now in its third successful season will appear at the Stephens Opera House on Friday March 3 and it comes to us with the endorsement of such papers as the New York Sun, Telegraph and the Chicago papers, etc.

A realistic scene depicting life in the Mountains of Kentucky is said to be a dramatic offering creating more than usual interest.

The feudism which recently has created editorial comment is brought to light with vivid realism and the culmination of an affair of love between two idylls of the Kentucky mountains, gives ample opportunity for the discussion of the realistic merits pro and con of Kentucky's dissentious factions—the law and those who would oppose it.

Several very clever people have been engaged for the interpretation of this drama and from present indications a large local reception is predicted. Prices, 25, 35 and 50 cents. Seats now on sale at Watson's drug store.

Torrey and Alexander, Evangelists

FROM time to time in history the world has been moved by intellectual, moral and religious impulses that seemed to touch all classes of people in many different countries. The preaching of Peter the Hermit started the crusades; Wycklif, Petrarch, Savonarola, Huss, Erasmus, Luther and Calvin led in movements of several centuries ago for the revival of learning, religion and morals, while in times less remote the world has seen great religious awakenings led by such men as John Wesley, Whitefield and Jonathan Edwards. The revival movements in which Dwight L. Moody was so powerful a figure are within the memory of this generation. At the present time there are manifestations in different parts of the world of special interest in the religious life.

In England a systematic campaign was planned out before the beginning of the present evangelistic work in the great British metropolis. The nonconformist clergy of London and many of the clergy of the Church of England united in furthering the movement. The center of interest at present is Albert hall, which holds 10,000 persons and in which the meetings, under the direction of the evangelists Torrey and Alexander, are in progress. The campaign in London is under the direction of the London Evangelistic council. In the preparations for the Albert hall meetings a door to door canvass within a radius of three miles was instituted, a quarter of a million invitation tickets were left at the houses within the district, and a choir of 3,000, under Mr. Alexander's direction, was organized, so that there might be at each meeting 1,000 trained musicians to lead the singing. One hundred thousand hymn books, 10,000 forms for choristers and 250,000 prayer cards, giving daily subjects, were distributed.

Reuben A. Torrey and Charles M. Alexander are both Americans, though their chief evangelistic work has been done in Australia, Great Britain and

CHARLES M. ALEXANDER.

Ireland. They call the services they conduct "missions," that being the term in use in England. Dr. Torrey is known in America as the superintendent of the Moody Bible Training institute in Chicago and pastor of the Moody church in the same city. He was born in Hoboken, N. J., in 1856, and as his father was a man of some wealth he was brought up in the enjoyment of all the advantages which money can afford. He attended Yale college and Yale Theological seminary, was ordained a minister and took charge of a Congregational church at Garretsville, O. He left this work to spend several years in study in Germany and on his return to America was called to the pastorate of the Open Door church, Minneapolis, Minn.

When the late Dwight L. Moody established the Bible Training institute in Chicago he looked around for some one to whom he could intrust its direction and oversight. His choice fell on Dr. Torrey, who responded to the call of the great evangelistic preacher. Since he embarked in the work of holding missions he has traveled all over the world. He early found in Mr. Alexander a coworker who has been to him in many respects what the late Ira D. Sankey was to Mr. Moody. Mr. Alexander is a native of Tennessee and was educated at Maryville college. Possessed of a fine voice and an ardent love of music, he determined to devote his life to music in connection with evangelistic work.

THIS is the day of the natural waisted woman. The W. B. Erect Form has changed the American figure. It has supplanted discomfort with ease—it has banished the impossible and exaggerated figure produced by the old corset idea. It removes the strain of lacing from the sensitive parts of the body and throws all pressure upon the hips and the strong back muscles, supporting the stomach within the corset and not forcing it below the garment. The Erect Form is made in more models than ever before. There are forty distinct styles of this popular make, each meant for a distinct type of woman. Dealers in all sized towns and cities the land over, sell the Erect Form. Prices range upward from $1.

THE AMERICAN REVIEW OF REVIEWS MONTHLY

The more Magazines there are, the more Indispensable is The Review of Reviews

"Indispensable," "The one magazine I feel I must take," "The world under a field-glass," "An education in public affairs and current literature,"—these are some of the phrases one hears from noted people who read the Review of Reviews. The more magazines there are, the more necessary is the Review of Reviews, because it brings together the best that is in all the most important monthlies of the world. Such is the flood of periodical literature that nowadays people say that the only way to keep up with it is to read the Review of Reviews. Entirely over and above this reviewing section, it has more original matter and illustrations than most magazines, and the most timely and important articles printed in any monthly.

Probably the most useful section of all is Dr. Albert Shaw's illustrated "Progress of the World," where public events and issues are authoritatively and lucidly explained in every issue. Many a subscriber writes, "This department alone is worth more than the price of the magazine." The unique cartoon department, depicting current history in caricature, is another favorite. The Review of Reviews covers five continents and yet is American, first and foremost.

Men in public life, the members of Congress, professional men, and the great captains of industry who must keep "up with the times," intelligent men and women all over America, have declared that it is "indispensable."

ALBERT BERTIG COMP.

THE VALUE OF OPALS.

It Mainly Depends on the Colors Shown in the Stones.

Veins of opals are usually met with in soft formations where nothing above ground indicates their presence. The search for them, therefore, often requires considerable time. But it is not extremely difficult, for opals are generally found near the surface. Indeed, it was thought for a long time that they were not to be found as deep as twelve feet below the surface. This opinion has, however, given way in the light of evidence, because opals of great value have been discovered at a depth of fifty feet.

The value of opals depends upon several considerations, of which the principal one is the color. It is important that they should be bright and not present streaks or spots alternating with uncolored substance. The most valuable are those which have red fires or mixtures of red and yellow, blue and green. Opals of a single tint are of little value unless the tint is particularly striking and the figure beautiful. Indeed one of the essential qualities of the opal is the arrangement of the figure, which sets off strikingly the hue of the stone.

When the figure is quite regular and distinct it is the more valuable, much less so when the grain is quite small and irregular. Sometimes the color appears as a single blaze or with figures regularly spaced. It may then be of a fine ruby red and is much sought after, but oftenest the uniform tint is only green or reddish and has but little brilliancy.

The cutting is very important for the opal. Thus a thick stone will be much less beautiful than a thin stone, which, on losing part of its volume, loses also the figure. The foundation tint contributes much to the beauty. It ought to be transparent, slightly milky and harmonize fully with the different reflections of the opal, which, when it is really beautiful, presents a variety of hues infinitely pleasing to the eye.—Jewelers' Circular-Weekly.

HE HATED MUSEUMS.

Thoreau Catalogued Them as the Catacombs of Nature.

I hate museums. There is nothing so weighs upon my spirits. They are the catacombs of nature. One green bud of spring, one willow catkin, one faint thrill from a migrating sparrow, would set the world on its legs again. The life that is in a single green weed is of more worth than all this death. They are dead nature collected by dead men. I know not whether I muse most at the bodies stuffed with cotton and sawdust or those stuffed with bowels and flashy fiber outside the cases.

Where is the proper herbarium, the true cabinet of shells and museum of skeletons, but in the meadow where the flower bloomed, by the seaside where the tide cast up the fish, and on the hills and in the valleys where the beast laid down its life and the skeleton of the traveler reposes on the grass? What right have mortals to parade these things on their legs again, with their wires, and, when heaven has decreed that they shall return to dust again, to return them to sawdust? Would you have a dried specimen of a world or a pickled one?

Embalming is a sin against heaven and earth—against heaven, who has recalled the soul and set free the servile elements, and against the earth, which is thus robbed of her dust. I have had my right perceiving senses so disturbed in these haunts as to mistake a veritable living man for a stuffed specimen and surveyed him with dumb wonder as the strangest of the whole collection, for the strangest is that which, being in many particulars most like, is in some essential particular most unlike.—Thoreau's Journal in Atlantic.

Robert Burns' Muse.

Robert Burns, though he had the choice of such works as the Spectator, "Locke on the Human Understanding" and Pope, together with odd plays of Shakespeare, which formed the staple reading of his home, nevertheless owed most to an old collection of songs. "This," he says, "was my vade mecum! I pored over them during my rest or walking to labor, song by song, verse by verse, carefully noting the true, tender and sublime from affectation and fustian. I am convinced I owe to this practice much of my critic craft, such as it is!"—All the Year Round.

FULTON and vicinity is still enjoying excellent sleighing.

IT would seem from the talk of established naval plants and the building of great fleets of war vessels by the maritime nations of the earth, that other methods beside arbitration must be invoked to promote peace on earth.

JUDGE CHARLES SWAYNE, of the Northern district of Florida, who has been on trial before the United States Senate on articles of impeachment, has been found not guilty on all twelve charges. It is rumored that Judge Swayne will tender his resignation to President Roosevelt without delay.

THE death of George S. Boutwell occurred at his home in Groton, Mass., on Monday morning. He had been governor, congressman, senator, secretary of treasury and a leader of political thought. He was an abolitionist Republican and was known as a man of sincerity.

ON the authority of the Japanese Minister at Washington it is stated that no peace proposition has emenated from his government to Russia. It was hoped that an early ending of the struggle was in sight, but hostilities have been renewed with increased vigor and a harvest of war's victim's is the result.

THE International Commisson which investigated the action of the Russian Baltic fleet under Admiral Rojestvensky in firing on the Gamecock trawling fleet while passing through the North Sea on October 22d last, sinking one of them, killing two men and wounding several others. Expressed opinion is that there were no torpedo boats among the trawlers, and that Admiral Rojestvensky's action in firing upon the fishing fleet was therefore unjustifiable. The Russian commissioner alone dissented on this point. He declares that in his opinion it was the hostile action of fishing vessels that caused the firing by the Russians. The report views in detail the evidence which was taken at the hearings held by the commission and approves the orders issued by Admiral Rojestvensky to his officers, previous to the departure of the fleet from Libau, for their guidance in case of attack.

Conference Called.

Fifth Tour Around the World of

The Great Browning

and a superb company of ORIENTAL WONDER WORKERS

Presenting the Strangest, Weirdest and Most Bewildering Entertainment Ever Given in this City.

The Weird, Mystic CLEOTO, Queen of Conjectural Reverie, in the thrilling and realistic visionary entertainment, THE HEART OF THE WORLD. The marvel of Europe and the wonder of the entire world. No written narrative can possibly describe the strange excitement she creates.—Boston Globe.

A show to please amusement lovers of all classes, appealing to its mysteries, enjoyable in its novelties. THE GREAT BROWNING presents African Metempsychosis MOHAMIED, THE MYSTERIOUS, offering a series of marvelous manifestations; THE MENOUGHS, presenting the mysteries of Lehassa; THE WEIRD ZANTEO, bewildering Illusions; LOUISE THORNE, the Indian Chela; FRED MENOUGHS, in Re-incarnation. A special program of Vaudeville features contributed by a carefully selected corps of artists.

Conjectural Reverie is the most singular feature ever presented to the public. The experiments are of absorbing interest, so weird and peculiar that often a feeling of deep awe prevades the audience. People in the audience who wish to test the matter merely think intently of a question on any subject, past or present or future. The question is not mentioned to The Great Browning nor to anyone. The sensitive usually gives a correct answer, and then correctly states the question, which up to that time is absolutely unknown to anyone but the person thinking of it. It is totally unlike anything ever presented by any other entertainers, and is undeniably the greatest bewilderment ever known.

The Oswego, N. Y. Times says: MISS CLEOTO was placed in a mesmeric sleep and answered dozens of questions thought of by the most prominent people in the audience. She told past, present and future events, deaths, murders, robberies, fires, weddings, of lost and stolen goods. She told the residences of absent people, and if they were alive or dead, and gave such accurate descriptions that the most skeptical were lost in dumb bewilderment at the inexplicable nature of the clairvoyant's revelations. DON'T MISS THIS NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT. Chaste, Piquant and Original. ARTISTIC TO THE GREATEST DEGREE.

First Life Insurance Policy.

The first life insurance policy of which the details are on record resulted in a lawsuit. William Gybbons insured himself on June 15, 1583, for £383 against dying in twelve months. He died on May 18 of the next year, and the [illegible] underwriters (the company [illegible] days) contested payment [illegible] that he had lived twelve [illegible] twenty-eight days each.—

Tales Told By the Thespians

MISS ELEANOR ROBSON, who has made such a success in "Merely Mary Ann," comes of a family of actors. Her grandmother, Mrs. Evelyn Cameron, was a member of Macready's company, and her mother, Madge Carr Cooke, is playing Mrs. Wiggs in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Miss Robson does not share the popular prejudice against the number thirteen. "So far," she said recently, "it has been my lucky number. I was born on the thirteenth of the month; there are thirteen letters in my name; I was graduated on the 13th of June; left New York on the 13th of August to take my first ride in a sleeping car. I made my first appearance on any stage in San Francisco on the following 13th of September. Thirteen was the lucky number of the leading man in the company with which I played. I made my first hit in "Arizona" on the 13th. It was the thirteenth day when I made my first New York debut. It was followed the same season by two other debuts, all made on the 13th. I rarely go to a hotel that I do not get room 13."

ELEANOR ROBSON.

Maclyn Arbuckle of "The County Chairman" before he became an actor was a lawyer in the high grass district of Texas. He was a warm friend of the great humorist, Bill Nye, and tells many stories of the quaint personality and ready, bubbling wit of the litterateur. Arbuckle has a copy of the paper which Nye edited in Tombstone, Ariz., and the sheet is typical of Nye—filled with sly digs at his fellow townsmen and with a current of humor hidden in every line. The following advertisement appears in the columns: "Owing to my ill health I will sell at my residence in township 19, range 18, according to the government's survey, one plush raspberry cow, aged eight years. She is of undoubted courage and gives milk frequently. To a man who does not fear death in any form she would be a great boon. She is very much attached to her present home with a stay chain, but she will be sold to any one who will agree to treat her right. She is one-fourth Shorthorn and three-quarters hyena. I will also throw in a double barrel shotgun, which goes with her. In May she usually goes away for a week or two and returns with a tall red calf with wabbly legs. Her name is Rose. I would rather sell her to a nonresident."

MACLYN ARBUCKLE

Joseph Jefferson tells the story of a theatrical manager who met the representative of an opera company.

"Mr. Purcifal," said the manager, according to the New York Times, "when you play at Ronoke visit the Hotel Innery. The landlord serves a splendid dinner at 50 cents a plate."

"Thank you for the suggestion," replied the other gratefully. "We play there next week."

"How is this?" demanded Mr. Purcifal a week later. "I am charged 75 cents a plate, while the Oriental High Stepper company, which played here last week, had to pay only 50 cents?"

JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

"My friend," retorted the landlord convincingly, "those other people charged me but 50 cents to see their show; you demanded 75 cents."

Henrietta Crosman, who is now playing in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," is very much afraid of fire and has good reason for such a feeling. She is the daughter of an army officer. Much of her girlhood was spent at posts on the frontier. Oftentimes her father took her and her mother on expeditions into wild parts of the country.

HENRIETTA CROSMAN.

On one occasion her father was at the head of a battalion of infantry and engineers sent by the government to establish a temporary post along the line of a proposed railway. The troops had planned to erect temporary wooden structures for their better comfort during their sojourn at the point and had completed the excavations for the cellars, but were still living in the tents, when one night a prairie fire came sweeping down on the camp.

The soldiers were quickly ordered into an adjacent patch of woods to tear off limbs and branches, and, armed with these, they were formed into a line and advanced toward the oncoming line of fire. The few women and little Miss Crosman were placed in one of the cellars as a protection from the smoke, which rolled over them in volumes. The fire had almost reached the camp when a current of air which came down a valley carried it off to the right, and the camp was saved at the moment when despair possessed all.

Years afterward Miss Crosman was stopping at the Baldwin hotel in San Francisco. "Oh, dear," she said one day, "I shall never feel satisfied while I am here. I have a presentiment that something is going to happen, and I am so afraid of fire."

She decided to leave the hotel on a Monday, and the following night the hotel was burned to the ground.

E. H. Sothern, who is co-star with Julia Marlowe in Shakespearean repertoire this season, tells a story about his father, who was famous years ago as Lord Dundreary.

The elder Sothern was a firm believer in the noisy audience. He considered that the play patron, if he was pleased with the entertainment, should demonstrate his pleasure. On one occasion he was playing in a small town where the manager of the theater had recently been to New York. He had visited the Madison Square theater, at that time under semireligious management, where dim light prevailed in the auditorium and loud applause was deemed decidedly indecorous. The manager returned to his town and gave a quiet "tip" on what was "the real thing" in New York theater manners. Sothern and his company played the first act without evoking a laugh or a "hand." When the curtain fell he listened for the customary call, but there was only silence—awful silence. Then, before the second act, he gathered his company and said: "We don't seem to be hitting 'em at all. We must pitch in for all we are worth in this act." Star and company worked like Trojans, but apparently without result. At the end of the second act the local manager went to Sothern's dressing room and began to congratulate him on his success and to tell him how delighted his audience was.

E. H. SOTHERN.

Sothern interrupted him. "Don't guy me," he said. "Why, I haven't heard any laughter or applause."

"Laughter! Applause!" returned the manager proudly as he drew himself to his full height and thrust his hand behind the breast folds of his coat. "I should hope not, indeed! There was one man snickered, but we put him out."

Frank Daniels, who is starring in "The Office Boy," was once a real office boy at $8.33 per month. "Comedy," he says, "is much more serious than tragedy and in many cases is much more difficult to render effectively. Comedy, to be effective, must be serious, must be studied, must be planned out with scrupulous care, with specific attention to the minutest detail. The most successful comedy parts that have ever fallen under my observation were those that had been planned with the most laborious efforts and that, although they may have seemed to be spontaneous, were merely the result of a careful and studied simulation of spontaneity. There is a reason for all this. Stage comedy finds its effectiveness more in situation than in lines. The success of those situations depends on the attention to detail, grouping, tableau, climax and all else that goes to make up the stage illusion. Lines follow them as a matter of course; hence I say that comedy is the most serious business in the world.

FRANK DANIELS.

"A young school of acting acquaintance of mine last summer probably shaped his future career on the stage by a remark he made to me, which suddenly revealed that the young man possessed a keen appreciation of humor. He came to me, telling me of his disappointment at his first attempt. 'I was to come on the stage stealthily and say, "Hist!"' he exclaimed. 'And?' said I. 'And I said it, and I was,' he mock pathetically concluded. I told him he was a comedian and ought to be hissed for undertaking serious work, and he immediately changed his course of study."

Richard Golden of Henry W. Savage's "Common Sense Bracket" company tells the following amusing instance of English "as she is spoken." The comedian had returned from a rehearsal and was sitting reading the paper. His wife came into the room and began twisting herself around in an effort to see the back of her new blouse. By the tense lines and pouting aspect about her lips he knew that her mouth was full of pins. He knew it anyway without looking for those symptoms.

"Umph-got wuff-wuff sh-thbf-fsy-f," she said.

"Yes, it looks all right," he answered.

"Owf-wuff gs-pf-suf-up-up w-r-r-roogshsth," she mumbled.

"Of course it does," he assured her, glancing over the top of the paper. "It fits like the paper on the wall."

RICHARD GOLDEN.

"Sw-ssh-uguz-woll gph-m-mm-sh-p-z," she said, stamping her foot.

"Didn't I tell you it was all right?" asked the comedian, lowering the paper. "Maybe it needs a little taking up in the shoulders, but nobody could notice it."

Hastily letting the pins fall from her mouth to her hand, she cried: "I've asked you three times to raise the window blind so that I could get more light. It's a pity you can't understand plain English."

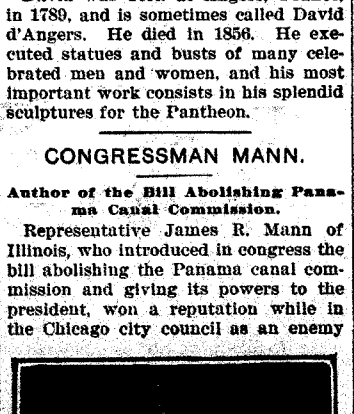
A GIFT FROM FRANCE.

The Bust of Washington by Pierre Jean David.

In the year 1823 Pierre Jean David, the great French sculptor of the early part of the nineteenth century, executed a bust of George Washington which was presented to the United States in the name of the people of France. This was during the lifetime of the Marquis de Lafayette, and he gave the sculptor the benefit of his intimate knowledge of the character of Washington. The work was paid for by subscriptions raised among the French people. Nearly thirty years after the bust had been placed in the capitol at Washington it was destroyed in a fire which took place there.

Not long since it was discovered that a plaster cast of the bust existed in the studio of the sculptor, and descendants of Lafayette took the initiative in having a replica of the work which had perished presented to America. The offer was made through the American ambassador to France, General Horace Porter, and the American government having intimated that a duplicate of the original bust would be accepted with pleasure a cast was made in bronze and presented to the United States through the French ambassador to the United States, M. Jusserand.

D'ANGERS BUST OF WASHINGTON.



Washington's birthday was chosen by Ambassador Jusserand as the occasion for the presentation of France's gift. The bust stands on a beautiful pedestal of Carrara marble.

David was born at Angers, France, in 1789, and is sometimes called David d'Angers. He died in 1856. He executed statues and busts of many celebrated men and women, and his most important work consists in his splendid sculptures for the Pantheon.

CONGRESSMAN MANN.

Author of the Bill Abolishing Panama Canal Commission.

Representative James R. Mann of Illinois, who introduced in congress the bill abolishing the Panama canal commission and giving its powers to the president, won a reputation while in the Chicago city council as an enemy of boodle methods. He was born in Illinois in 1856 and educated in the public schools, at the University of Illinois and at the Union College of Law of Chicago. He was valedictorian of his class at the latter institution and even as a young man won considerable repute as an orator.

JAMES R. MANN.

He stands high in the ranks of the legal profession of his state, was chairman of the Republican convention of the state of Illinois in 1894, is serving his fourth term in congress and has just been re-elected to another. Congressman Mann was a warm advocate of aiding Cuba in her struggle against Spain and in the spring of 1893 led in the movement by which the Republican majority in the house of representatives was committed to such a policy.

THE TERM "IDIOT."

In the Original Greek It Simply Meant a Private Person.

The word idiot is itself of interesting history. Its primary Greek significance was that of a private as distinguished from a public person. Our words idiom, idiosyncrasy, etc., are from the same root. The idiot in Greek was simply one not engaged in public affairs. The beginnings of the degradation of the word are shown in its application soon to the common people as distinguished from the upper classes. It was then applied to unprofessional and lay people and soon became the slurring title of the unskilful and awkward. By slow degrees it became applicable to the stupid and at last to the imbecile and idiot. As late as the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries the word was still used in its earlier senses. This long sad history speaks indirectly of the pathetic history of the imbecile. If he was not killed or starved to death by neglect, etc., he was usually reduced to the condition of a beast either about the house or fields or was actually driven into the woods and forced to live in caves, among wild animals, etc. In 1799 Itard took a "wild boy" found in the forests of Aveyron and tried to teach him. The ability of the wild boys and wolf children to live and the number that did so shows that fdiocy, as we have later learned, is of all degrees and that a mind may be variously defective in some ways, even idiotic, but in others with capabilities well preserved. Blind Tom, the pianist, and the large number of mathematic idiots are examples that show how far we are from understanding the real nature of idiocy, and they more than suggest the partial retention of sound mentality of the defective, the possibility of seizing upon the one or few normal or even highly developed faculties and perhaps bringing others into co-ordination with them and to normality. The court fools and jesters of the olden times were often such partial idiots and defectives, and they truly lived upon their "wits," which were often better than those of their masters.—American Medicine.

THE VALUE OF EXAMPLE.

To have your child truthful, be truthful.

To have him temperate, be temperate in all things.

To have him kind to others, be yourself kind to others.

Prescribe healthful amusements and so far as you can take part in them.

Prove to him by your life that a good name is to be chosen before great riches.

Teach him that riches are not to be despised, but should never be got by doing harm to others; that when acquired should be treated as a trust, not as a hoard.

To have him honest, present to him in yourself a living example of honesty. The chief part of a child's knowledge comes through observation. Acts mean more to him than speech.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Demonstration.

Tommy and his little brother had been playing together most peacefully for some time when suddenly the baby gave a howl, followed by a series of shrieks. The mother rushed in and, while soothing the crying child, sought to find out what had hurt him. Tommy resisted her cross examination for a time, but finally admitted that he was guilty.

"What did you do to him?" she asked.

"I stuck him with a safety pin."

"What in the world did you do that for?"

"Nurse said you couldn't hurt yourself with a safety pin, and I wanted to see if it was so."

Lincoln's Retort to Douglas.

Douglas, meeting Lincoln on one occasion during the exciting campaign of 1860, made a characteristically unpleasant remark, saying:

"Why, Abe, I remember you when you were nothing but a young clerk in a little western town, peddling out goods at retail and selling liquor over the counter."

"Yes," answered Lincoln, "the only difference between you and me was that I was on one side of the counter and you were on the other."

The Era of Noise.

What an age of noise this is! Do you know any single human being who is capable of being silent for an hour at a stretch? I know two, and I value them according to their rarity. Not only does everybody talk, but almost everybody talks loud. I went into a shop the other day, and the clatter of conversation sounded as though the place were full of people. Yet all the noise was produced by three individuals. Why should they shout?—London Truth.

The Classes in England.

In England the upper class gambles, but does not drink; the middle class drinks, but does not gamble, and the lower class both drinks and gambles. It is a characteristic circumstance that the upper class makes laws to prevent the lower class from gambling and that the lower class is in favor of legislation to prevent the upper class from drinking.

A TRINITY OF EVILS.

Cured by Dr. Kennedy's NEW Medicine After Other Treatment Had Failed.

Mr. Martin Montgomery, of Silvara, Penn., formerly of Roxbury, N.Y., writing to Dr. David Kennedy, of Kennedy Row, said:

"Your new medicine, Cal-cura Solvent, is immense. It cured me of liver and kidney troubles, and rheumatism, after a lot of weary dosing with things that did no good. It is a record breaker and no mistake."

As in Mr. Montgomery's case, rheumatism is often, indeed almost always, complicated with kidney and liver trouble. It is because Cal-cura Solvent acts on the kidneys and liver and at the same time expels uric acid from the blood, that it is such a reliable remedy for rheumatism and the attendant disorders. It cures by removing the cause, therefore the cure is permanent, safe and sure. All druggists, $1.00.

The Englishwoman.

The American or the French woman never allows herself to be daunted by the fact that she has not been endowed by nature with good looks or a good figure. She dresses as carefully, carries herself as grandly, as her beautiful sisters and indeed assumes rather more of an air than they, with the happy result that America and France seem to have no ill dressed and no really plain or ungraceful daughters. We Englishwomen are too modest and fancy we are altogether hopeless unless we have good material on which to work.—London World.

A Chicago Alderman Owes His Election to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for affections of the throat and lungs," says Hon. John Shenick, 220 South Peoria street, Chicago, "Two years ago during a political campaign, I caught cold after being overheated, which irritated my throat and I was finally compelled to stop, as I could not speak aloud. In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses that afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largely subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won this seat in Council." This remedy is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Clean Milk.

Ordinarily when milking a great number of bacteria will find their way into the milk through the dust and dirt and hairs which fall from the cow. This may be largely prevented by wiping the flanks and udder with a moist sponge or cloth just before milking. It is still better to wash. However, this procedure requires more time, as it must be followed by careful wiping to prevent dripping. Cows should not be bedded, fed or carded just before milking, as any one of these acts creates dust, which will certainly find its way into the milk. If pure milk is sought it is desirable to reject the first streams of milk from each teat, as these contain thousands of bacteria. The reason for this rich development of germs is found in the favorable conditions provided by the milk in the milk cistern of the udder and also by the possible access of the germs through the milk duct.

A Dinner Invitation.

After a hearty meal, a dose of Kodol Dyspepsia Cure will prevent an attack of Indigestion. Kodol is a thorough digestant and guaranteed cure for Indigestion, Dyspepsia, gas on the stomach, Sour Risings, Bad Breath and all stomach troubles. N. Watkins, Lesbus, Ky., says: "I can testify to the efficacy of Kodol in the cure of Stomach Trouble. I was afflicted with Stomach Trouble for fifteen years and have taken six bottles of your Kodol Dyspepsia Cure, which entirely cured me. The six bottles were worth $1,000 to me." Kodol Dyspepsia Cure will digest any quantity of all the wholesome food you want to eat while your stomach takes a rest—recuperates and grows strong. This wonderful preparation is justly entitled to all of its many remarkable cures. Sold by H. C. Giesler and George T. Boyington.

The Englishwoman.

The American or the French woman never allows herself to be daunted by the fact that she has not been endowed by nature with good looks or a good figure. She dresses as carefully, carries herself as grandly, as her beautiful sisters and indeed assumes rather more of an air than they, with the happy result that America and France seem to have no ill dressed and no really plain or ungraceful daughters. We Englishwomen are too modest and fancy we are altogether hopeless unless we have good material on which to work.—London World.

Champion Liniment for Rheumatism.

Charles Drake, a mail carrier at Chapinville, Conn, says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the champion of all liniments. The past year I was troubled a great deal with rheumatism in my shoulder. After trying several cures, the storekeeper here recommended this remedy and it completely cured me." There is no use of anyone suffering from that painful ailment when this liniment can be obtained for a small sum. One application gives prompt relief and its continued use for a short time will produce a permanent cure. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Pressure of Silage.

Few realize the heavy side pressure of silage. At a depth of ten feet the sidewise pressure per square foot for each square foot of the silo area may be 110 pounds, at twenty feet 220 pounds, and so on. This means that at the bottom of a sixteen foot square silo, thirty feet deep, the side pressure on the lower foot of the wall would be 5,280 pounds at the time of filling. When the silage has heated and settled this side pressure, of course, is very much reduced.

THE TERM "IDIOT."

In the Original Greek It Simply Meant a Private Person.

The word idiot is itself of interesting history. Its primary Greek significance was that of a private as distinguished from a public person. Our words idiom, idiosyncrasy, etc., are from the same root. The idiot in Greek was simply one not engaged in public affairs. The beginnings of the degradation of the word are shown in its application soon to the common people as distinguished from the upper classes. It was then applied to unprofessional and lay people and soon became the slurring title of the unskillful and awkward. By slow degrees it became applicable to the stupid and at last to the imbecile and idiot. As late as the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries the word was still used in its earlier senses. This long sad history speaks indirectly of the pathetic history of the imbecile. If he was not killed or starved to death by neglect, etc., he was usually reduced to the condition of a beast either about the house or fields or was actually driven into the woods and forced to live in caves, among wild animals, etc. In 1799 Itard took a "wild boy" found in the forests of Aveyron and tried to teach him. The ability of the wild boys and wolf children to live and the number that did so shows that idiocy, as we have later learned, is of all degrees and that a mind may be variously defective in some ways, even idiotic, but in others with capabilities well preserved. Blind Tom, the pianist, and the large number of mathematic idiots are examples that show how far we are from understanding the real nature of idiocy, and they more than suggest the partial retention of sound mentality of the defective, the possibility of seizing upon the one or few normal or even highly developed faculties and perhaps bringing others into co-ordination with them and to normality. The court fools and jesters of the olden times were often such partial idiots and defectives, and they truly lived upon their "wits," which were often better than those of their masters.—American Medicine.

Consumption

¶ There is no specific for consumption. Fresh air, exercise, nourishing food and Scott's Emulsion will come pretty near curing it, if there is anything to build on. Millions of people throughout the world are living and in good health on one lung.

¶ From time immemorial the doctors prescribed cod liver oil for consumption. Of course the patient could not take it in its old form, hence it did very little good. They can take and tolerate it for a long time. There is no oil, not excepting butter, so easily digested and absorbed by the system as cod liver oil in the form of Scott's Emulsion, and that is the reason it is so helpful in consumption where its use must be continuous.

¶ We will send you a sample free.

¶ Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

WINTER COW FEEDING.

Home Grown Grains Preferable to Byproducts of Mills.

In an address before the Wisconsin Institute on winter cow feeding W. F. Stiles said in part:

In selecting winter feed one should first select the coarse feeds, as they are usually the cheaper. Of these hay of the various kinds should be considered first, then corn fodder in its many preparations, and in some cases, but rarely, straw may be used. Then from the grains which are grown on the farm and the concentrated feeds that are on the market the feeder must select those which are the best and cheapest compared with their feeding value to feed in connection with these coarse feeds.

When the difference in the price is not too great I believe that it is always best to feed home grown grains in preference to the byproducts of the mills. There is a flavor, a palatability, to fresh ground grains which is not found in most of the mill feeds, and palatability has much to do with digestibility. This being the case, we should see well to it that all our crops should be cut in season and put up in the best shape to retain as much as possible of their flavor.

It has been found by various tests that a cow that is giving enough milk to make one pound of butter a day needs a daily ration of about twenty-five pounds of dry matter. In this there should be about two pounds of digestible protein, twelve pounds of digestible carbohydrates and half a pound of fat. As clover hay is comparatively rich in protein, when possible this should always form part of the ration. When it is abundant allow the cows to eat all they will of it. If part of the corn crop has been put in the silo, then give the cows about forty pounds each daily. When fodder corn is fed instead of silage, then give each cow two bundles as they come from the binder. These should be given in two feeds, as should also the silage and hay. Besides this they should have all the corn stover they will eat up clean.

Now, as a cow's stomach is not large enough to hold all of the feed she requires of the coarse fodders, it will be necessary to feed her some grain or mill feed. For most seasons perhaps the best mixture when silage is fed will be three pounds of corn and oil meal, three pounds of oatmeal and two pounds of oat bran or middlings. When no silage is fed, then substitute two pounds of oilmeal for the bran. A year like this, when oilmeal is $25 and bran more than $15, I believe oilmeal far the cheaper.

Skim Milk For Calves.

Skim milk can be profitably fed to calves until they are six or eight months old, and when milk is plenty it may be fed as long as the calves will take it. I find in my experience that some calves will not take the skim milk after eight or nine months old and others will take it as long as they are fed it. Heifers seem to drop off before steers or bull calves.—Cor. Hoard's Dairyman.

Salt the Cattle.

Give the cows a handful of salt every other day, or, still better, have a box in the yard where they can have access to it at all times.

PROFITABLE FEEDING

Every dairyman knows that only early cut hay is profitable to feed milk cows. The milk goes up in the pail in the same ratio as the mow lowers when the early cut hay is fed. We find cottonseed meal the most economical of the feeds we buy in the market for our use. But in different localities cows need different feed, as we have cause to know. On the farm we left in Peacham, "and a good one, too," we had to feed bran or bone meal to keep the cows in condition, and a bone was at all times a great luxury, while on our present farm they eat bone meal only under protest and mixed with other feed. Bran has been of little value to us as a butter feed, but is excellent for the young things.—From Address of C. C. Gates Before Vermont Dairymen's Association.

Foxtail Hay.

Foxtail hay in some Finnish tests gave better results than timothy when fed to dairy cows. Cows receiving this feed produce milk containing a slightly higher percentage of fat than those fed timothy.

Clover as a Dairy Feed.

Too little study is put on the matter of cattle and cow feeds by the general farmer, and the advance out of the old errors is slow. There are thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, of farmers who year by year raise enough timothy hay for their cows and will not believe that clover is better for them. This is the case even of many farmers where clover could be produced almost without effort.—Cor. Tribune Farmer.

Facts About Ensilage.

The Vermont experiment station found that corn was worth more for milk in the form of ensilage than if handled in the usual way. Professor Babcock of the Wisconsin station found that milk from ensilage feed exceeded the milk from dry feed in churnability 12 per cent—that is, the cream of ensilage milk gave up its butter fat in the churn 12 per cent better.

Silage and Clover Hay.

Experiments at the New Jersey experiment station demonstrate the practicability of feeding home grown protein, such as alfalfa or crimson clover hay, with silage, which means a great deal to the feeder. The farmer who is fortunate to have in the latter part of winter a good supply of silage with clover hay will note a decided gain in his returns from the dairy.

Robert Burns' Muse.

Robert Burns, though he had the choice of such works as the Spectator, "Locke on the Human Understanding" and Pope, together with odd plays of Shakespeare, which formed the staple reading of his home, nevertheless owed most to an old collection of songs. "This," he says, "was my vade mecum! I pored over them during my rest or walking to labor, song by song, verse by verse, carefully noting the true, tender and sublime from affectation and fustian. I am convinced I owe to this practice much of my critic craft, such as it is!"—All the Year Round.

Mild Flavor In Cheese.

Cold storage cheese may have a very mild flavor intensified by subsequent exposure to approximately 60 degrees. The flavor so produced does not partake of the sharp tang usually found in old cheese ripened at a high temperature. Care must be taken not to have cheese temperatures too high nor maintained too long.

DIED.

The remains of Mrs. Jane Rappole, who died in Theresa last week, were brought to this city on Friday by her nephew, Mr. G. A. Rappole, for interment in Mount Adnah.

Charles Delos Burch, aged 57, died in Oswego on Tuesday from diabetics. The deceased was the eldest son of the late Thomas and Mary Burch of Volney. He was in this city on Thursday where he contracted a cold which hastened his death. Mr. Oscar Parker of this city is an uncle of the deceased.

Nancy Sears Cook, aged 80, wife of Mr. W. H. Cook, died at her home in Sixth street on Sunday. The funeral was held from the late home this Wednesday afternoon, the Rev. John Richards officiating, and the body will be interred at Mt. Pleasant. Beside the husband, the other surviving are two daughters, Mrs. A. W. Dillon of Chenango Forks, and Mrs. Maria Hendricks of this city, three grandchildren, Mrs. Calvin B. Burch of Pulaski, George G. Dunn of Camden, and William Dunn of this city, and one sister, Mrs. Harriet Porter of this city.

On Sunday afternoon prayer was said at the home of Mrs. A. C. Livingston, over the remains of Mrs. Cyrus Hesly, aged 69, who died in Wilmington, N. C., on Wednesday. The deceased was called to Wilmington from her home in New York City by the illness of her husband, who was on a business trip, and her death ensued soon after reaching his bedside. Beside the stricken husband, four brothers, the Messrs. F. E. Nettleton of Scranton, Pa.; S. W. Nettleton of Toledo, O., A. C. Nettleton of Scranton, Pa., and A. E. Nettleton of Syracuse are left with a host of friends to mourn the deceased.

Stephen Pendergast of Phoenix, one of the best known farmers in Central New York, died at his home in that village on Saturday morning. He had been ill but a short time. Mr. Pendergast was one of the largest land owners in this part of the State. In addition to other properties, he was the owner of the well known Riverside Stock Farm and the driving park where the Onondaga County Fair is held. He took much interest in horses and was the owner of some classy animals. He was born in Ireland fifty-seven years ago. Besides the widow, four sons and a daughter survive, Dr. Walter Pendergast, Stephen, Henry, John and Miss Emma Pendergast.

Laura H. Platt, aged 64, widow of the late Leroy H. Platt, died at the home of her son, Mr. H. L. Platt, on Thursday morning. The deceased had been in failing health for some time and her relatives and friends knew that the summons to "the home not made with hands," could not be long delayed, yet when the release from suffering came it was a cruel shock because so unexpected at that time. Mrs. Platt was born in Perryville, N. Y., 1841, and came to Fulton about 1856, where she attended Falley Seminary. She was united in marriage to Leroy H. Platt, in 1861, and with the exception of a few years spent in Oswego, has been a resident of Fulton since the date named. Mrs. Platt was a member of the Universalist church, and also of the W. C. T. U. The funeral services were held from her late home on Saturday afternoon, the Rev. Dr. James Vincent, assisted by the Rev. Nelson Reynolds, officiating. Interment will be made in Mt. Adnah. Those who survive to mourn the loss of a loving mother and sister are two sons, H. L. Platt of this city, and W. H. Platt of Trinidad; one daughter, Mrs. M. E. Hulbert of Solvay; two sisters, Mrs. Stephen Skinkle of Poughkeepsie and Mrs. R. N. Cross of Buffalo, and one brother, Prof. Edward E. Hill of Chicago.

It is with feelings of infinite sadness that we chronicle the passing away of Edward Crosby Marsh, aged 76, at his home in Utica street, Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock. Two weeks ago the deceased was taken with grippe as the result of exposure during a severe snow storm, and on Saturday morning a stroke of paralysis rendered helpless the right side and deprived him of the power of speech. Dr. Homer P. Marsh of this city and Dr. Edward Frank Marsh of Brooklyn were constantly at the bedside of the sufferer, and all that medical skill and loving care could do before the approach of the grim messenger was unavailingly done. Death came peacefully, not as an avenging angel but as a benediction on a life well spent. The deceased was born in [illegible], in 1829, and came to Fulton [illegible] an infant [illegible] in marriage with Miss Martha A. Preston, and to them five children were born, of whom four are now living; Victor Eugene, with the Dexter Folder company of Pearl River; Dr. Edward Frank, of Brooklyn; Dr. Homer P., and Miss Mary Marsh of this city. Mr. Marsh was secretary of the Granby Grange for several years and contributed several papers to agricultural journals during that time; he was also assessor in Granby for several terms.

In 1890 he removed to this city where he has since resided. He was a member of the First M. E., church and was a staunch Republican always. The deceased was one of nature's noblemen and his life was a constant exemplification of the golden rule. The funeral services will be held from the late home on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the Rev. John Richards officiating. Interment will be made in Mount Adnah cemetery.

Knights of Columbus Ball.

Everything is in readiness for the Knights of Columbus ball which will take place in the beautiful Lodge rooms this evening. Nothing is needed to complete the scene of lovliness but the happy throng which will assemble a few hours later. The committees have done their work thoroughly and the happiness and comfort of the guests has been the chief consideration. The different rooms have been elaborately decorated by Mr. W. A. Smith from designs which he originated and has skillfully carried out. The reception hall is canopied with rose and moss green crepe paper while the reception room proper is resplendent in shell pink and pea green crepe paper. The guests will be greeted upon their arrival by Messrs. B. J. O'Grady, E. J. O'Brien, D. M. Sullivan and F. E. LaPorte. Connecting with the reception room is the den, which is decorated in red and black, carrying out the color scheme of the room decoration. Next is the card room with its trimmings of red, green and black crepe paper. But it is in the ball room that the decorator has done his best work and the result is exquisite. Extending from the ceiling to within six feet of the floor is a latticed canopy of white ribbons and evergreens. The canopy extends out two feet from the side walls and under it will be place the divans and settees.

The ceiling is draped with a myriad of red, white and blue electric light bulbs, caught at intervals by cupids. At the northern end of the room is the emblem of the order beautifully constructed. It is over four feet in diameter and contains 108 colored electric bulbs so that the effect will be most brilliant when the ball opens. The committee on decorations was composed of Messrs. Martin Mulcahy, Bernard Doyle, M. Mathias and W. E. O'Hare. Buell's full orchestra will furnish the music for dancing At midnight an elaborate collation will be served.

OSWEGO COUNTY BAR.

Annual Banquet An Enjoyable and Memorable Occasion.

The Oswego County Bar Association banquet in Oswego on Thursday evening was the most successful event yet participated in by that body as an organization. The different committees had done their work well and there were no hitches in the program. Justice Pardon C. Williams of Watertown was the guest of honor and Attorney Bulger presided as toastmaster. The Fulton attorneys who were present were Messrs. William S. Hillick, Claude E. Guile, Herbert J. Wilson, Giles S. Piper, S. B. Mead and F. G. Spencer.

Toastmaster Bulger, in introducing County Judge Stowell to the assemblage, said in part: "You all know him, he is a good lawyer and is acquainted with everything but fear. No matter what has been his activity in other matters he has won the respect of the lawyers as County Judge. I refer to Merrick Stowell." To which Judge Stowell replied, "An occasion like this, softens the little antagonisms that may have been engendered and makes one feel that he wants to forgive his old enemies."

The speakers for the evening were the Hons. Williams of Jefferson County, M. L. Wright, Ross, Emerson, Diefendorf, Stowell, Watts, Hancock, Cullinan, Purcell and S. B. Mead.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. Odd Russian Custom.

Eight days after a baby is born in Russia its hair is shaved by a priest. This is snipped off in four places on the top of the head to form a cross. The baby's godfather collects the shorn down, pinching it up with wax from the tapers. It is then thrown into the baptismal font. If the little pellet sinks there is great sadness in the baby's home, for the Russians believe that the child will die before a year has passed.

NEEDS OF THE CITY.
Mayor George W. Brooker

The fourth annual banquet of the Chamber of Commerce of this city was held last evening in the City Hall and was attended by a large number of members and invited guests. A reception in the Citizen's Club parlors preceded the banquet. The affair throughout was of a most pleasing and enjoyable nature; the responses to the toasts both interesting and instructive, and all present voted the affair a most successful event. The Webb orchestra furnished delightful music. The banquet was served by the Ladies' Aid Society of Zion Episcopal church in a most pleasing manner. The work of trimming and decorating the City Hall was done entirely by Mr. Holden Pratt, trimmer for F. P. Connell & Co., and which called forth much praise.

President Redhead, when coffee and cigars had been passed, in a very happy vein, extended, in behalf of the Board of Managers to all the members of the Chamber of Commerce and to the honored guests, a most cordial greeting, and introduced Dean Brooks.

The Development of the Town.

Dean Brooks spoke as follows:

Gentlemen of the Chamber of Commerce: I approach my subject with some hesitancy, lest I may be thought to assume to instruct this Chamber as to its proper work. I have not had opportunities for informing myself upon the subject as to warrant any such assumption.

The development of the town is a great, living problem, and one of absorbing interest to him who applies himself to the matter of its solution. Brick and mortar, streets and avenues, shops, stores, manufactories and public buildings, I am sure, do not constitute the town. I am told of some places in other parts of our country where all these materials exist in complete order, but there being no inhabitants there those places can hardly be called towns. If we add to this equipment a population, we may have the town. These materials have their part in the developement of the town, they give expression to that which really constitutes the town.

Development means growth, and growth, too, in that which is good, strong and enduring. There can be no true development except from the bottom upward. In all real development known to us, there is the manifestation of stable laws which work for enlargement. There is no development into littleness and weakness; no development backward or downward. The town must grow from the bottom and not from the top. It must and will advance into strength, breadth and depth by means of natural processes and not otherwise.

We are an intensely practical people. Good sense, the off-spring of experience, is our guide in most things, and very safely so. Engaged in the great work of a Chamber of Commerce, being men of experience in the business of the world, and knowing full well that which makes for profit and prosperity in a community, we are on the look-out for a wealth-producing population. We invite the manufacturer with his capital and several hundred employees. The factory employs our own citizens and many new-comers, increases the number of families and homes and is indeed an important factor in our expansion. It produces something that supplies the world at large, and carries by that means, the name of our city to all parts of the world, and to a considerable extent advertises our general character. It creates a wage-earning and money-spending population. The stores and shops of all classes feel quickly this reinforcement. All the various activities of the town are influenced to an extent. Increasing activities in productive industry calls for railroad and telegraph facilities, and a new station, new hotels, new facilities of many kinds are required, and after agitation they are obtained. Conventions, fairs and exhibitions of all sorts are solicited that our hotels, cafes and tradesmen may have a money benefit from them. The business of selling goods comes without our asking, ordinarily. Good railroad accommodations come when the thrift of the city warrants them. The enterprise of the city and that of the railroad company go hand in hand. Each is a helpmeet to the other. Lawyers and doctors come without calling. Whatever else we may do as a Chamber of Commerce, let us keep our eye on the true, real mark at which we are aiming, to wit, a wealth producing population. To this great end, the men and families who are here, must be kept, and others must be induced to come. The streets must be paved. Strangers do not like muddy and broken streets. The schools must be convenient, the street traffic or street car service must be improved. There are new comers here and they came because their means of support are here. But they are a great help to the town in many ways. Not the least important of these ways is the spending of their money. But the influences of the increase in population is far-reaching. These things are all of great importance in the town's development. We are being enlarged by outsiders aided by our energies and the inducements we offer. The wealth-producing population is here, and it is constantly increasing. There are, however, many contingencies hanging about this great work. Moneyed men die, business men go into bankruptcy, or choose to go out of business, or prefer to remove to some other town for some reason or other. These changes are often genuine disasters to the town. The business goes, the population goes, and with them the spending money goes, and a set-back is given to trade and industry that will require years of effort to counteract. If in all this, there is this simple idea of a wealth-producing population, and this in its scope comprehends the field and purpose of the Chamber of Commerce, then, while these are all elements essential to the town's growth, standing alone we see a structure attempted to be erected without substantial foundation, if indeed it can be said to have any at all. It is in constant danger of collapse.

In the first place any increasing population must be so planted that the individual and family life will take deep root. To constitute a man a real citizen, his life must be made to mingle with the life of the town; he must have a place in the heart, in the sympathies and in the activities of the town, and he must be made a factor in all the future progress of the town. To effect the real development of the town we must first and always develop the men who make the town. The means for accomplishing this are always at hand, well known and various.

The city cannot forget her parks and the beauty spots located here and there and not leave undone a duty vital to the best life of the city.

From the park the family goes to the home where the beauty of flowers and of foliage and green grass and spraying water is reproduced in green, close-cut little front yards, the little flower beds, the trees and shrubbery. Tidy house and yard follows to correspond and a great step has been taken in the development of that in men and women which makes beautiful the city in all its parts. Many years ago I purchased my first house and lot. The only thing remarkable about it was the size of the mortgage. I was proud of my own house and in a small front yard I had a bed of beautiful flowers. I painted my house and dressed up the grounds. The tax assessors came along, and to my surprise the valuation of my property was considerably increased. The beauty of the flowers and of the surroundings were esteemed to have enhanced the value. I paid heavily for my flower bed and for my ambition to look well. In a year or two I had to repair my house. The flowers were gone and the house looked shabby and untidy. Again the assessors came around. To my delight the value of my house had shrunken and I got my flower bed back again in reduced taxes. This was my first lesson in the philosophy of municipal taxation. Encourage the families to beautify their homes and surroundings, and by no means tax their flower beds. Can't we transform our dingy streets into avenues of beauty by a well organized attempt? Many of those streets are cheerless and dingy and a disgrace to the city because the people who inhabit them either do not know how, or have not the means to make them otherwise. I think hundreds of these people endure those conditions unwillingly. Proper help from competent men will remedy this to a large extent. The little dirty, half-alive geranium seen in some of the windows of these houses tells pathetically its story of repression and discouragement. Let us plant a lily by the side of it. What speaks more loudly for the city than this encouragement of the love of the beautiful in the toiling people? What is more readily accomplished where good sense and tact are brought to bear?

In all our building we neglect the building of brains. We are compelled to concede that brains is that on which the city is built. Virtue is weak without brains; progress is impossible without brains; the peace of the community is unstable without brains; crime thrives where brains are neglected. This is a great field for effort. I think here is the vital part of the up-building. I think we here reach the bottom layer in the foundation of the structure we propose to erect. Every city has a multitude of young men and boys, who, if let alone will soon constitute a heavy weight on the thrift of the city. That scores of young men who are enduring life in our city, hopeless of any success and prosperity and who are a source of taxation in some form on the thrifty citizens, could have been saved from all this and saved to the city as factors in its development I think no one doubts who has given attention to the subject. This is a stupendous waste. This is a reckless throwing away that which is best and most vital to our welfare.

If statstics were secured, would it be found that the city bred young men are they who build up the town? Who stand for what is large and stable in the city life? It may be, but such statistics would surely show how the neglect to build the brain in our boys results in a thriftless city population.

I believe our Chambers of Commerce have a wide and easy field here to occupy. The city young men can be saved to the city, and to its prosperity and growth by well directed efforts. Instruction as to opportunities, the way to improve them, the great possibilities in life, the open door to the best life, wisely directed financial help, will go far toward the discharge of this great duty. It is not good business to relegate the building of the brains of our young men to charitable institutions.

DEAN JAMES B. BROOKS, Syracuse University

Dreams and Deeds.

In addressing the assemblage on the foregoing subject, Prof. Wickes said, in part:

"The query may be raised by many as to what such a subject has to do with a banquet of a Chamber of Commerce; and, indeed, if there be a man here who has never dreamed dreams, nor done deeds, this is no place for him, unless he so eats as to start a dream and so rises up from the table as to begin to do something in the world.

"But with all right builded men there were dreams both in waking and sleeping hours—and I have heard of men who during a solemn sermon addressed to the wide-awake faculties of the mind have timed the words of the preacher by a somnolescent accompaniment of snores and ended the uneasy dream with a snorting "amen."

"Dreams are as multiform in character as they are common—from nightmares after a midnight feast, ecstatic exclamations over "a dream of a dress" "or a bonnet," "pipe dreams," pendent from the life of young bloods, whose aspiration like their pipes 'end in smoke'—up to the rapt visions of Isaiah, or the inspired dreamings of the tinker in Bedford jail. But a dream that is simply a dream and nothing more, is like the "flighty purpose which never is o'ertook unless the deed go with it."

"But let no one despise dreams or dreamers, for "we" ourselves are "such stuff as dreams are made on!"

"But what then of deeds? Surely these are as multiform as dreams—deeds of foolishness, of wickedness, of freedom, heroism, charity. As for a deed that is bad and nothing less, there is no place nor sympathy for it among men of right thought and noble purpose; its only use being to make such men hate it with a greater hatred, waiting the day when the clear sunlight of God's love shall dispel every such miasmic vapor. But every good deed 'shines in a naughty world.'

"And so it comes to pass that a dream that is something more and a deed that is something good, together make the most potent force on earth. Hail, then, to the union of dreams and deeds—fusion without confusion. God hath brought them together; no power can put them asunder. No great deed without a dream back of it, whether it be Napoleon, with his dream of world-wide dominion, or the poor slave of the South, dreaming in the rice-fields of the dawn of freedom. No inspired dream without a luminous deed before it, whether it be that of the lad of Genoa who found our own fair America, or the man Cyrus Field, sending under the sea the message of the new world to the old.

"Nor do men do all the deeds and boys all the dreaming. 'Twas the man Kossuth, who dreamed of a freedom for Hungary which his eyes never saw, but his son is summoned to the Austrian court as a token of royal favor. 'Twas a boy in my own school who saved a young companion from drowning, himself perishing in an attempt to save a second boy, and so the tablet reads: 'Who by deed heroic lost his mortal life but gained youth immortal.'

"Yes, the dreaming and the doing—imagination and duty—how inseparably linked they are! To each and every guest assembled around this gracious board, I can wish no better wish than that your dreams and plans may be noble and generous; your deeds be many and fine! So shall you enrich your own lives, strengthen your union and exalt in honor this charming city you call "home."

Needs of the City

The following response by Mayor Brooker was most able and pertinent;

The subject assigned me tonight is one of such importance, and at the same time so complex and broad in its character, that I am reluctant to attempt more than a general outline in the brief time at my disposal. It is a subject that has occupied the brightest minds and the best talent of all ages since men first gathered together for mutual protection and benefit. It would seem therefore the wise course to practice only those principles which have been demonstrated as the most likely to promote the common good.

It is also a subject that is entitled to, and ought to receive the most careful consideration of every man who is interested in a progressive city, and in an up-to-date municipal government, and the lack of that feeling of personal responsibility and interest is one of the principal causes of a poor administration.

Too often it is the case that the taxpayer has no further feeling of responsibility or interest in city affairs, after he has cast his ballot, and the first sign of dry rot and decay in any community is that unhealthy spirit of indifference, from which those conditions spring that make necessary an independent movement on the part of the people for their own safety. Nearly every large city in this broad land, and many small ones too, have furnished proof of this statement by those periodical demands of an aroused public conscience for clean and honest government, as was witnessed in the city of Philadelphia a few days ago.

The unsatisfactory condition of many local governments is also largely due to the intrusion of party politics into city affairs which can however be remedied by the active co-operation of those interested in clean government; intelligent criticism, and that deserved loyal support that is always welcome by those who are honestly and conscientiously doing their best for the public service and for the enhancement of the values of your own property.

On an occasion of this character I am reluctant to touch a key that is not in full harmony with the apparent signs of the times, or to say one word that is not in full accord with the spirit of the occasion, but the financial history of our country is the best evidence that it is the unexpected that always happens, and while I do not care to assume the role of prophet, nor predict that the period of our financial progress is drawing to a close for the time being, or that the shades of coming events have fallen across the pathway of that almost uninterrupted prosperity of the past seven years, I do say, and state it emphatically, that the handwriting has already appeared on the wall and that the time for retrenchment and economy has come.

In times of great national prosperity people, and especially the American people, are prone to branch out; to extend their business, to open up new projects and new enterprises and to assume obligations that become burdensome at the first sign of a reaction; for there is nothing more sensitive than capital, which always takes in sail at the first sign of an approaching storm. It is therefore, or ought to be, one of the first requirements of successful management, whether it be municipal or business, that we should never build up so high as to become top-heavy, for when the cold winds of adversity come, as they have always come, and the rains of financial depression beat upon that house, it will also fall like the house on the sands.

It has been said, and is an indisputable fact, that the public is always poor, and while I do not believe that we should sacrifice principle for expediency nor civic improvement in order to maintain a low tax rate, I do believe that only such improvements should be made at this time as can be paid for without becoming a burden on the public. I also believe that every extraordinary improvement should first be submitted to the people for their approval before being contracted.

Whether it be New York City, whose last budget was $110,000,000, or the City of Fulton, which levied on our last assessment roll $102,000, there is only one method of administering the affairs of a city to the satisfaction of its tax-payers, and it is not with a reckless disregard nor extravagance of public money, but with that economy which you would insist upon in the management of your own business.

All the later city charters of New York State are based largely on the principle of government by commission, I presume with the idea that it is possible to induce men of integrity and broad gauge business capacity to accept an appointment, who would not under any circumstances permit their names to be dragged through the political mud of a modern campaign. It is then of the utmost importance, considering the almost unlimited power with which these boards are clothed, that the standard of appointive officers should be a high one and always maintained.

With an administration made up of such men; with a spirit of economy predominant in every branch; with the sincere and loyal support of every public-spirited citizen, who is interested in its future welfare, and with the efficient aid and energetic co-operation of our Chamber of Commerce, there is no reason why the City of Fulton should not enjoy that share of prosperity and financial happiness which she is entitled to receive by right of her splendid location; her extensive and varied manufactures; the progressive spirit of our people and also by virtue of the fact that it is our city and our home.

A letter of regret was read from Congressman Knapp.

City Medical Association.

The City Medical Association, at its meeting, had a very interesting session. Dr. G. G. Whitaker, the retiring president, read a very able and interesting paper upon the history and work of the association, which was well received.

Owing to the death of President Marsh's father, the regular meeting was postponed until Thursday evening, March 9. The members are urged to be present at this meeting as business of special importance will be transacted.

Some action is contemplated with reference to enforcing collections against that class of the public who do not pay for the services of physicians. The proposed amendment to the "garnishee" act is expected to bring some relief. A large number of the laboring class come under the provisions of this act, and this will bring some relief. The association may find it advisable to hire a capable and energetic attorney to compel those, who can, but will not pay, to do so.

Members of the association are requested to bring lists of those of their clientele who do not pay. A most thorough "round up" of all the "deliquents" in the city is to be undertaken. A reasonable opportunity will be given them to pay their medical bills. Those who are able to pay and do not, will "have a hot old time" if they do respond. Medical attendance to this class will be refused after reasonable notice has been given.

Some proposed legislation will be discussed, and two members of the association are expected to read papers upon scientific subjects.

The Cooking School.

The next lesson in the cooking school will be given promptly at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon in the social rooms of the Universalist church. Mrs. Elizabeth Jewett, conductor. Interesting points in the best cookery will be demonstrated.

ONTARIO TELEPHONE CO.

Plans Perfected for a Combination of the Independent Companies of the State.

A meeting was recently held in Syracuse for the purpose of effecting an organization of the Syracuse district of the New York State Independent Telephone Association. Twenty-three companies were represented by managers or stockholders, these concerns operating in Onondaga, Oswego, Madison, Oneida and Cayuga counties. Others in attendance from this vicinity were C. D. Warner, Fulton; J. A. Brown and C. H. Everts, Mexico; R. S. Keller, Phoenix, and W. B. Reed, Sterling.

Mr. Stockwell was honored by being elected Vice-Chairman of the district. F. M. Potter, Jr., General Manager of the Syracuse Telephone Company was named as Chairman, and H. W. Fluhrer was selected for Secretary. The next meeting will be held in Auburn on May 4th.

The principal business of the gathering was the discussion of ways and means for effecting a stronger and closer organization of the independent companies of the district. The extension of rural lines was also considered and it is expected as a result several new companies will be formed.

The plan now being carried out by the independent interests calls for the division of the State into twelve districts. The State organization itself is only one of many similar ones in other States in the Union, all of which form the National Independent Telephone Association, and annually elects delegates to the meeting of the latter organization.

Briefly outlined, the plan of district organization of the companies bucking the Bell system is as follows:

Each district is to have its own organization and to meet at least four times a year; the presidents of the district associations become vice-presidents of the State association; the State association, which meets once during the year, is to be composed of delegates from the district associations.

Champion Liniment for Rheumatism.

Charles Drake, a mail carrier at Chapinville, Conn., says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the champion of all liniments. The past year I was troubled a great deal with rheumatism in my shoulder. After trying several cures, the storekeeper here recommended this remedy and it completely cured me." There is no use of anyone suffering from that painful ailment when this liniment can be obtained for a small sum. One application gives prompt relief and its continued use for a short time will produce a permanent cure. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

During the progress of the funeral-train bearing General Sherman's remains to St. Louis after his death many pathetic episodes occurred to show the love and reverence in which the great War Hero was held.

The most touching incident occurred in the night. At about three o'clock in the morning the train was rolling through the open country. As it passed a small, isolated farmhouse the door opened and an old man, dressed in full uniform and holding a rusty musket at "present arms," appeared in the doorway. Alone, miles from any neighbors, and at a late hour of the night, he stood there, bareheaded, until the train had passed.

Thus an old soldier paid last tribute to his General.—March Lippincott's.

LAKESIDE MUST BUILD.

Rapid Transit Will Not Obstruct the New Organization.

According to the Syracuse Telegram General Manager E. G. Connette has announced that the Syracuse Rapid Transit railroad was not going to build a line to Fulton or Oswego; that the field was to be left clear to the Beebe Syndicate, owners of the Lakeside & Baldwinsville road, to go head, unobstructed with the work of extension that has been proposed.

The Baldwinsville road will be build to West Phoenix. If a new bridge is built to the latter village the tracks may be extended into the town. The line will then run to West Fulton, the proposition being to cross the lower bridge, coming down on the East side of the river and joining the Oswego Traction Company at Seneca Hill, coming into this city over the latter's tracks. That's the cheapest route, engineers say.

Another plan in building from Fulton to this city is to make a circuit of both bridges and a belt line coming down on the west side of the river through the village of Minetto and continuing down the river road past the Country Club and joining with the Oswego Traction Company some place along Erie street. This route must be built, it is said, in order to have a complete control of the local situation from the south, which would shut off opposition. While the east side construction would be cheapest, the west side is said to be the key to the situation if it is desired to shut off the possibility of opposition.

Easter Excursion to New York, Boston and New England Points.

On account of urgent requests, the New York Central has decided to cancel the annual Spring excursion to Washington and substitute an Easter excursion to New York, Springfield, Palmer, Worcester, South Framington and Boston. The date decided upon is Saturday, April 22, and tickets will be good to return leaving point of destination to and including Thursday, April 27, thus giving patrons Easter Sunday and the following week in New York, Boston or the other points mentioned. The rate has been placed at one fare for the round trip, plus $1, with a maximum of $10 which should be within the reach of all, and passengers will have the privilege of selecting any of the above mentioned points for their destination.

The Easter season in New York is the most beautiful of all the seasons in the "greatest city in the world," and in Boston, also, it is the most desirable season for a visit to the "Hub of the Universe."

All who can possibly do so should not hesitate to take advantage of this excursion, as their time and money cannot be spent to greater advantage to themselves.

GRAFTING TIME.

Top Working the Old Fruit Trees In March and April.

Instructions in cleft grafting to be used in top working old trees are in demand at this season. In cleft grafting the stock is cut off square and split, and into the split a scion with a wedge shaped base is inserted. Two scions, one on either side, double the chance of success. The scions (cut and stored away the fall previous) contain three buds, the lowest one just above the wedge portion. This bud is covered by the grafting wax, through which it easily pushes its way.

A good grafter makes a scion by three strokes of the knife, one to cut off the scion and two to shape it. The outer edge of the wedge should be a little thicker than the inner one.

Preparing the Stock.

The stock or stub must be cut off squarely and smoothly with a sharp, fine toothed saw. The stub is then split to a depth of an inch and a half or two inches, for which purpose one of the various kinds of grafting knives or chisels with a wedge upon it for opening the clefts is used.

Inserting the Scion.

The scions must be thrust down to the first bud and fit tightly. Some very practical people claim that the secret of success in grafting lies in making the exact line of separation between bark and wood in the scion meet the similar line in the stock. Professor Bailey in his "Nursery Book," from which this outline of cleft grafting is adapted, says the most essential points are to be sure the scion fits tightly throughout its length and to protect the wound with an airtight covering. Still he advises making the lines meet as nearly as possible, and the scions are set a trifle obliquely to insure the contact of the cambium layers. The wound is now covered with wax so as to completely exclude moisture and air.

Formulas For Grafting Wax.

For Cold Weather. — Resin, six pounds; beeswax, one pound; linseed oil, one pint. Apply hot with a brush one-eighth of an inch thick over all the joints.

For Warm Weather. — Resin, four pounds; beeswax, one pound, and from half to a pint of raw linseed oil. Melt all together gradually and turn into water and pull. The linseed oil should be entirely free from cottonseed oil. Apply with the hands greased.

Dried Beet Pulp For Sheep.

Two years ago dried beet pulp was placed on sale in large quantities in various Michigan markets. One year later dried molasses beet pulp was also offered for sale to stock feeders. The wide distribution of these materials and the large quantities used have created a demand for information concerning their feeding value for various classes of animals. From tests made the Michigan experiment station draws the following conclusions:

That both dried beet pulp and dried molasses beet pulp are possessed of feeding values comparing very favorably with corn.

That grain mixtures containing dried beet pulp produce more mutton at less cost than similar amounts of grain mixtures alone.

That dried molasses beet pulp possesses a somewhat higher feeding value than dried beet pulp, but in the experiment the difference was not great enough to offset the difference in price.

IN THE GARDEN

Some of the garden catalogues are very interesting reading just now. One of the most striking novelties offered is Crimson Winter rhubarb, which was originated by Luther Burbank. It is claimed to be remarkably hardy and of fine quality. Being extremely early, it is well adapted for forcing. One seedsman claims it will make marketable stalks the first year from seed.

The Great Emperor asparagus promises an abundant crop the second year from seed. This would be an interesting thing to try. For a sure supply most people will still follow the good old plan of transplanting one or two year roots and enjoying a third year crop.

A variation in that great, popular onion the Prizetaker is offered as a result of years of selection under the name of the New Commercial Yellow Globe onion, a somewhat handicapping title. It claims decreased size and better keeping quality than the Prizetaker.

The New Sweet Scented Tufted Pansy

The sweet scented "tufted" pansies so common in Europe are pretty things in the garden and will do well in a somewhat shaded, damp place if the soil is rich. Sow in early spring. "Tufted" refers to the shape of the growing clump of plants and not to the flowers. They are hybrids of the violet and pansy.

The Useful Wichuriana Roses.

The Wichuriana or Memorial roses will climb charmingly over low trellises, travel along rocky slopes and embankments, clothe bare, unsightly spots with verdure and bright blooms and will luxuriate where other roses would not live.

The Scale and the Flowering Shrubs.

You love the lilacs? So does the San Jose scale. Perhaps that is what is the matter with your bushes that used to be so fine. The scale also finds a congenial home with the Japanese quince, that is one of our earliest and handsomest hardy flowering shrubs.

How Shall We Plant the Tree?

When you are putting in a tree take this as the "secret of success." A good large hole, don't be skimpy; the soil packed tight with a stout, heavy rammer, as it is carefully and slowly filled in about the roots, not too much haste proper pruning and a good mulch.

"The 999"

The love and admiration of the average boy for the locomotive was prettily illustrated a few evenings ago. A seven-year-old had been to a Sunday school concert with his parents and listened to some of the beautiful songs that Bliss and Sankey used to sing, such as "Too late," "Let the lower lights be burning," "It is well with my soul," Hold the fort," "Pull for the shore," and "The ninety-and-nine." The last made a deep and lasting impression. George H. Daniels, an old friend of the family, visited them the following night, and the youngster, running to him, exclaimed, "Oh, Mr. Daniels, I heard 'em sing your everlasting song last night!" "Indeed!" said the dean of passenger agents; "what was the name of it?" "The 999," replied the boy, thinking of the most advertised engine in the world, that which gave fame to the Empire State Express. Best thing Daniels has heard in ten years.—From On the Tip of the Tongue, New York Press.

Whom The Gods Love.

There are two standards of measurement of human life: the one by years; the other by achievement. Measured by years, Sidney Lanier's life of less than two score was a broken column; measured by achievement, his life is not yet ended—he is immortal. Robert Burns died at thirty-seven; Byron at thirty-six; Poe at forty; Raphael at thirty-six; Lanier at thirty-nine. It is whom the gods love die young. And yet who shall say that the Scottish plough-boy, or the author of "Childe Harold," or he who sang of the "Raven," or the painter of the Transfiguration, or the composer of the "Centennial Cantata," do not, one and all, still speak to us in voices whose echoes will command enraptured listeners away down centuries?—Milton H. Northrup, in March Lippincott's.

FARM·FIELD AND GARDEN

THE ALFALFA GROWER'S FOE

Adulterated Seed, Especially That Containing Dodder of Any Kind.

During the last few years dodders have made their appearance in Iowa, Ohio, central New York and other parts of the country upon alfalfa. It is apparent that if alfalfa is to be destroyed in patches by dodder farmers will be discouraged in the growing of this most promising legume. Two species attack alfalfa, clover dodder and the field dodder common east of the Mississippi valley. Dodder in red clover is also occasionally complained of.

DODDER ON ALFALFA.

It is claimed that dodder is generally introduced through impure alfalfa or clover seed; hence the importance of making sure that these seeds are as free as possible from dodder and other seeds. The presence of dodder constitutes a distinct menace to alfalfa growing in the eastern states. When growers of clover seed and those who purchase and sow it are alike interested in detecting and removing impurities, a step toward improvement will be assured.

The dodder seeds are so small that they will usually be overlooked. The color of dodder seed is greenish or greenish gray, usually accompanied by scurfiness and roughening of the exterior of the seed.

The dodders are leafless excepting the small scales on the stems of yellowish color with threadlike stems twining around the plants upon which they live. They pierce the bark with small and short rootlets, which are called suckers.

The seed germinates in the soil and grows sufficiently in length to allow it to come in contact with the plant upon which it lives, when it immediately sends in its suckers and thus becomes established upon the plant.

The seed of the clover dodder, which occurs on both clover and alfalfa, is usually less than one twenty-fourth of an inch in diameter. Thorough screening of all alfalfa seed over a sieve of twenty meshes to the inch will remove this dodder seed, with small waste of the alfalfa seed.

The larger seeds, field dodder, should be avoided in purchase, as they cannot be removed to any appreciable extent by the screening.

Preparing For the Corn Crop.

Corn is the greatest crop for the American farmer. It is likely that the days of very low corn prices are past. Good corn growers who season after season are growing crops that yield approximately 100 bushels of shelled corn to the acre are not confined to any single section of the country. I am personally acquainted with them in the corn belt and on both sides of Mason and Dixon's line. A given strain of corn may produce excellent crops in Iowa and planted directly to different soil in Ohio prove very disappointing. The seed that makes me 100 bushels in southern Pennsylvania likely would not do as well for my friend in Connecticut. In the corn crop seed improvement should be started and maintained where "charity begins"—at home. While it is not unusual for very good yields to be secured by plowing a sod and planting two years to corn, it is the exception and not the rule to find the second crop, other conditions being equal, as good as the first. Good plowing is necessary. Thorough pulverization and compaction of the soil and the making of a uniform seed bed must be done.—N. F. McSparran in Farm and Fireside.

The Squirrel.

A squirrel's natural term of life is from fifteen to twenty years, and in localities where they are little disturbed they multiply with extreme rapidity. Indeed, in the early history of the United States they were so numerous in certain localities as to be almost a plague, and large sums were annually paid in bounty for the scalps. In the west large hunts were organized by the early settlers in order to try to reduce their numbers, as now it is found necessary to do to prevent the jack rabbits from becoming a scourge to the farmers. On these hunts thousands of squirrels wer killed, and yet from all accounts their numbers were not greatly reduced.

A Quick Witted Waiter.

A western congressman says that while he and certain friends were studying the bill of fare in a hotel on the New Jersey coast a mosquito alighted on the card. It instantly lost its life by a quick blow from the man holding the card, its little carcass remaining on the bill. With a smile the man pointed to the remains and said to the waiter:

"Do you serve these on toast here?"

"They're on the bill, sir!" was the witty retort of the waiter.

The Great Difficulty.

"Yes, but it's the other half that causes the most trouble."

"What's that?"

Emmer Compared With Wheat.

Comparisons between wheat and emmer are often made in such a manner as to be extremely misleading. The bushel of emmer (at thirty-four pounds or some such weight) is sometimes compared with the bushel of wheat (at sixty pounds), and even when the grains are compared on the basis of the actual weight of crop produced it is not customary to make any allowance for the chaff present in the emmer. On a fair basis, allowing 20 per cent for husk in emmer, figures from the various Canadian stations make it appear that emmer has been distinctly less productive than the best wheats, except at Brandon, where, although it yielded more than Red Fife and Preston, it was still inferior in crop to Goose and Roumanian. Though these conclusions are drawn from a comparatively small series of tests (three or four years) and are not therefore to be regarded as final, they indicate clearly that Common Emmer cannot generally be depended upon to give as large a crop of grain as the most productive varieties of wheat.

CONSTANTIA CAUCUS

Constantia took time by the forepiece and held a Republican caucus last week. There is some dissatisfaction expressed by electors who were not informed of the unusual procedure and were thus unable to have a voice in the matter. The delegates were not instructed although in the "house division" Justice Wright's friends were in the majority.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB

Interesting and Instructive Program Presented.

The regular fortnightly meeting of the Current Events Club was held last Monday evening at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. James Vincent. There was an average attendance of members. Those who were entrusted with the leadership of the meeting were the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle and Mr. Thomas Hunter.

Prof. George Moore was requested to give a history of the reform movement in Russia. He presented the facts that led up to the present industrial political revolution, the promises of freedom which had beguiled a vast majority of the citizens of that country into the belief that a constitutional assemblage would be granted by the Czar, and the vacillation which followed, threatening the downfall of the autocratic regime, were intelligently discussed.

Mr. Sawtelle explained the intricacies involved in the controversy between the Equitable Life Assurance society officials of New York; the treaties of arbitration presented by President Roosevelt to the United States Senate and the action in the Senate in regard thereto; the Standard Oil contention in Kansas, which was being investigated; the fraternal spirit manifested by the Emperor of Germany in asking for an interchange of college professors, which could not fail to be beneficial; the statue erected in Washington to the late Francis Willard; the revival in Wales, which was designated as being marvelous in the history of religious movements.

Mr. Thomas Hunter selected as his topic the large number of fires which had taken place in this country during the past two weeks, notably that of Hot Springs, Ark.; the death of Ex-Governor George Boutwell of Massachusetts, Ex-Senator Wolcott of Colorado, who was related to the Wolcott family, known to Fulton residents; Mrs. Leland Stanford, to whose family California was deeply indebted for the establishment of the University which bears the family name.

Mr. L. W. Emerick graphically described a visit to the Stafford University; he thought the crowning glory of all was the superb chapel which beggared description, and which was generally credited as being the most artistic of any of its size in the world

Mr. F. D. Van Wagenen addressed a few remarks on the decision reached by the Arbitration Commission in Paris regarding the firing of the Russian war vessels on the British trawlers in the English channel.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Almon Bristol, on Monday evening, March 20. The Rev. John Richards and Mr. Earl S. Brown will be the leaders.

Library Matters.

On Thursday of last week it was rumored that the labor unions of this city were planning to hold up the work on the new library building, but investigation discloses the fact that as yet nothing has been done regarding the matter. The contract as awarded to Mr. Wadsworth is a most advantageous one for the city and experts who have been interviewed, emphatically say that the same low figure for so magnificent a structure could not be secured again were bids called for. A number of bids had been secured from various contractors, and as Mr. Wadsworth's bid was the lowest, it was accepted after careful and mature consideration.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Mr. W. J. Pentelow Writes of a Visit to Former Residents of Fulton and Oswego, Who are happy and Prosperous at Riverside.

Mr. W. J. Pentelow, under date of Feb. 26, writes to a friend in this city from Corona, California, that he recently visited the Turner family (former residents of Fulton) at Riverside, and although Mr. Turner's mother had been quite ill, she was convalescent. Mr. Turner, Mr. Pentelow states, is spending his time most industriously and profitably, and has made some money in real estate transactions since his return to California. He purchased an orange grove and sold it within a few days, making a handsome profit. He has now a cottage nearly completed which he will sell as soon as possible. He has purchased a residence for himself and family on 14th street, the swell portion of the city, where they will have an ideal home. In a cosey cottage standing in a grove on the corner of Myrtle avenue and Center streets, continued Mr. Pentelow, we found Mrs. Barnes and her family of two children—a bright boy of about 6 years, named Lyman, after the late Henry H. Lyman of Oswego, and a very pretty and attractive girl of 7 or 8 years, and her mother, Mrs. Burgess, they were all fairly well and happy.

Mrs. Burgess wears her increasing years with grace and courage, remembering with pleasure her life in Oswego as a teacher in the High school and acting for a number of years as preceptress. We had about an hour's visit with them, which I assure you was enjoyable beyond expression. Mrs. Barnes spoke with much feeling of her younger days in Oswego; of the girls who were her closest friends—Mary Lyman, Lizzie McCully, who was then Lizzie McKinstry, and two other young ladies whose names I do not now recall. She remembers Mr. Lyman with that love and affection born of his many kind acts when she was a small girl in Oswego.

We left after one of the pleasant visits that comes to one only at rare intervals during life. All who know Mrs. Burgess learn to love and respect her many virtues, and Mrs. Barnes is an exact counterpart of her mother in every respect. We were promised a return visit in the near future. Unfortunately did not see Mr. Barnes, as he was at his place of business as manager of one of the large packing houses here. We hope to see them oftener in the future. Riverside is crowded with tourists at this time, over two hundred having arrived within three days last week.

We left Riverside about 5 p. m. The last few miles of our drive was after dark and we witnessed a rare spectacle in this vicinity, viz.: a brilliant display of the old fashioned chain-lightning and thunder, quite as great novelties here as an earthquake.

CITY HOSPITAL.

Annual Report and Election of Officers —Donations for Month.

On the 19th of March, 1904, the Woman's Auxiliary of the Fulton Hospital was formed; started by a few ladies for the purpose of aiding in all ways possible the hospital which had been in existence only a short time.

With this meeting, the first year closes. Its record is not all we could desire; there have been no great things done nor large sums of money secured, but advancement has marked the record, though it has been in little things and in little ways. The ladies who attended the meetings have been faithful, and the standing committees have performed well the work assigned. The membership has increased from thirty-four the first month to seventy-one for the year—a number which we hope will be doubled during the next year.

Only eight regular meetings were held, owing to there not being a quorum on four different months. The first three meetings were held at the homes of members, but through the kindness and courtesy of the K. of P., the remainder have been held in the rooms belonging to that society.

Thanks should also be extended to the editors of the city papers, who have been more than kind in publishing each month the lists of donations and notices, and at all times giving space for any other matters which we wished to bring before the public.

All through the year, in every way, the people responded generously to appeals made for the hospital by the auxiliary, no matter how often they were called upon.

Some sewing has been done by the ladies of this society, but more by the Committee on Work, which had a most efficient chairman. The Entertainment Committee appointed in June has done much to replenish the treasury, and should have the thanks of the society. During the year the following efforts were made to obtain money: On April 5th, (City Hall), benefit whist; June 29th, (park), ice cream sale; July 5th, (Opera House), concert by Madam Fulton; December 20th, (K. of P. rooms), Christmas donations; January 22d, 1905 (Mrs. Wettengel's home), benefit.

Thus the year has passed with much to look back upon with satisfaction, and much that could be improved, but as each year brings added knowledge and the wheels of an organization run more smoothly, so we hope that this coming year will see great advances made and that where this society was carried the first year it can at least creep the second

MARRIED.

Miss Pearl Cavalier of Oswego and Mr. Harry Taylor of this city were united in marriage on Wednesday by the Rev. P. J. Kearney.

On Monday morning at 6:30 o'clock in the church of the Immaculate Conception, occurred the marriage of Miss Cora LaLonde, daughter of Mr. and Mrs Joseph LaLonde, and Mr. Henry Mott, who is agent for the Adams Express Company in this city. The Rev. P. J. Kearney was the officiating clergyman and the bride was attended by her sister, Miss Edith LaLonde. The best man was Mr. Thomas Monohan of Oswego. The bride was becomingly gowned in a blue tailor-made suit with hat to match and she carried brides roses. The bridesmaids gown was tan voile and she carried pink roses. Previous to the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents to which the immediate relatives were invited. Mr. and Mrs. Mott left on the morning train for New York city and they will make their future home at the corner of Third and Academy streets.

DIED.

Andrew P. Zimmer, aged 36, died at his home in Oswego on Tuesday.

Mary J. Chappel aged 75, died at the home of her son, Mr. W. H. Chappell in South Fourth street on Wednesday. The funeral was held on Friday and burial was made in Fairdale.

The death of Mrs. Newell H. Gilbert, aged 62, occurred at her homein Fourth street early this morning. The funeral services will be held from the home, corner Rochester and Fourth streets, on Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

Macile, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Showers, died on Saturday. Prayer was held at the home on Tuesday morning and the services were conducted later at the Free Methodist church. Burial at Ira.

KATE A. HEALEY.

When Mr. Cyrus A. Healey was called away from his home in Bloomfield, N. J., on business to Wilmington, N. C., during the last week in January—the week of the blizzard—he was taken seriously ill with pneumonia. His wife and family physician, Dr. Shaul, were sent for, and under their care and ministrations Mr. Healey gradually improved in health. Shortly after Mrs. Healey's arrival she, too, was taken ill with the same dreaded disease. She was not regarded as seriously ill until twenty-four hours before she passed away. But her life work was ended and she was ready to enter into the place in the "Heavenly Mansion," her Saviour had prepared for her. Although her quiet and unselfish life, devoted to the comfort and welfare of others, was not generally known to the outside world, yet the sweet fragrance of her beautiful life and character will never be lost. The unfading record of that faithful, useful life, is written "on high" and on the tablets of the memory of many a friend and neighbor. It may well be said of her "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. Yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

Martin D. VanBuren, aged 62, who conducted a ladies tailoring establishment on the corner of Second and Cayuga streets, was found dead in bed on Sunday morning. The deceased complained of having had a chill on Saturday night and Dr. Scott was called. The physician considered that it was nothing more than a nervous chill and prescribed a remedy, telling him he would call again the following morning. There was nothing unusual about the patient's breathing and no indication of heart trouble. On Sunday morning, Mr. Van Buren's mother, who lived with him, went to his room at 8:30 o'clock, and found his bedroom door locked and she failed to get any response to her repeated knocking. At this time the doctor arrived, and when the door was forced open the patient was found lifeless, without any indication of struggle. He had apparently passed away peacefully in sleep. Coroner Cusick was notified and after an investigation it was revealed that death was caused by heart's disease, and he granted a burial permit. The immediate relatives of the deceased are his mother, aged 86; a sister, Mrs. Harriet P. Ward, and a brother, Orlando—all of whom reside in Fulton. The funeral services will be held on Thursday at 3 p. m., from the Universalist church the Rev. James Vincent officiating. Burial in Mount Adnah cemetery.

The K. of C. Ball given on Wednesday evening last was a most successful affair from every viewpoint. Mr. James R. This action has been brought about by a petition presented to the Council by the manufacturers below the lower river and canal bridges stating that the congregation of marketmen with their loads of produce, etc. seriously interferes with traffic at the present market place and the petitioners ask that another spot be settled upon.

A good story is told of a dashing young Canadian who had been paying marked attention to one of Oswego's fairest daughters. The young lady had been visiting friends in this city, and when the time came for departure it was noticed by many friends of the young couple that they looked very sad and dispirited.

They however immediately took compassion on them by endeavorin to drown their sorrow in showers of rattling rice. The young couple boarded the train with many God speeds from the gay young crowd. The occupants of the car were very much amused, but somewhat puzzled to see the young man bid the blushing girl a hasty farewell, and many were the sympathizing glances she received upon her lonely journey.

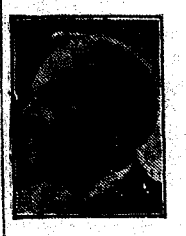
First Life Insurance Policy.

The first life insurance policy of which the details are on record resulted in a lawsuit. William Gybbons insured himself on June 15, 1583, for £383 against dying in twelve months. He did die on May 18 of the next year, and the disgusted underwriters (the company of those days) contested payment on the plea that he had lived twelve months of twenty-eight days each.—World's Work.

People Who Are In the Public Eye

It is whispered that James Hazen Hyde, whose connection with the Equitable Life Assurance society has caused a controversy in that corporation, aspires to be ambassador of the United States to France some day. His prominence in the life insurance concern founded by his father, the late Henry B. Hyde, has not prevented him from giving attention to many matters quite outside the realm of business, and among these are the study of the French language and literature. He is president of the Federation of the Alliance Francaise in the United States, has distinguished himself in various ways by his efforts to encourage the study French in America and has been decorated an official of the French Legion of Honor in recognition of his work. Recently he won fame by giving a ball in which a fete at Versailles in the time of Louis XIV. was reproduced, the guests wearing costumes of that era. Mr. Hyde is twenty-nine years of age and has a trim, well knit figure which shows off to advantage, as he is a very careful dresser. He wears his beard pointed in the French style, and it is said his ties cannot be matched anywhere outside of Paris. He is much interested in coaching and is reputed one of the best whips in America. The freedom with which he spends his money on this diversion may be judged by the fact that on his splendid country place at Islip, on Long Island, are stables in which the cases for harnesses and saddles are of carved mahogany. Mr. Hyde and his mother and sister own 510 of the 1,000 shares of the Equitable and practically control the corporation, which has assets of $413,000,000. The capital stock of the company is only $100,000.



JAMES H. HYDE.

An exciting scene occurred in the house of representatives when Congressman William R. Hearst of New York charged Congressman John A. Sullivan of Massachusetts with being a homicide. A newspaper owned by Representative Hearst had attacked Mr. Sullivan, and the latter replied in a speech in the house, which bristled with sharp and cutting remarks. Mr. Hearst retorted by denouncing his opponent as one who had assisted in "kicking a man to death in a saloon."

Mr. Sullivan, like another John Sullivan of greater fame, is a Bostonian. He was born at the Hub in 1868, educated in the public schools, the Boston High school, Boston university and the Boston University Law school, has served in the Massachusetts legislature and in 1902 was elected to congress as a Democrat. Last fall he was re-elected. It was when he was a boy of seventeen that the incident occurred to which Mr. Hearst referred. Sullivan's father kept a small hotel, to which a bar was attached. A former prize fighter, who was intoxicated, tried early one Sunday morning to enter the bar. On being refused admittance a scuffle with the elder Sullivan ensued. Young Sullivan went to his father's aid, and the pugilist was driven off. Several days afterward he died. A grand jury brought in an indictment for manslaughter against both father and son, and the former was sent to the penitentiary. The son was released on account of his youth and the circumstances in which he took part in the fight. After the father had been in prison for a year and a half it was alleged that the pugilist did not die from injuries received at the hands of the Sullivans. The imprisoned man was thereupon pardoned. Representative Sullivan says he did nothing he would not do over again under the same circumstances.

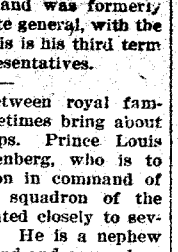
JOHN A. SULLIVAN

Representative John Jacob Esch of Wisconsin has had the honor of giving his name, in connection with Mr. Townsend of Michigan, to the most important measure passed in congress during the present session, the Esch-Townsend bill for regulating railroad freight rates. He is a member of the committee on interstate and foreign commerce, which was charged with drafting a bill on this subject for presentation to the full house. The bills drawn by Messrs. Esch and Townsend were thought to carry out best the recommendations of the president's message, and they were in consequence combined in the measure reported by the majority of the committee.

JOHN J. ESCH.

Mr. Esch is from a state where the subject of regulating railroad rates has been an issue for some years. He was born in Monroe county, Wis., in 1861 of German parents. Sparta, Wis., has been his residence since boyhood. He graduated from the high school at that place and also from the state university at Madison. He engaged for three years in teaching, taking up meanwhile the study of law, and graduated from the law department of the state university in 1885, has been active in the national guard of the state and was formerly acting judge advocate general, with the rank of colonel. This is his third term in the house of representatives.

Intermarriages between royal families in Europe sometimes bring about peculiar relationships. Prince Louis Alexander of Battenberg, who is to visit New York soon in command of the second cruiser squadron of the British navy, is related closely to several crowned heads. He is a nephew of the king of England and a grandson of the late Queen Victoria. He married his cousin, Princess Victoria, who was a daughter of Queen Victoria's daughter Alice. He is a nephew of the late empress of Russia and a brother-in-law of the czar, a brother-in-law of Prince Henry of Prussia and a native of Austria, where he was born in 1859. He wears both a German name and title. He became naturalized as a British subject when he entered the navy. Prince Louis recently became a rear admiral and is head of the intelligence department of the navy. The second cruiser squadron is reputed the fastest in the world, and the Prince of Wales is in supreme command of it. It will be inspected by King Edward before starting on its cruise to American waters. The flagship of Prince Louis is the Drake.



PRINCE LOUIS.

Representative Badger of Ohio, a Democrat, who was defeated for reelection, although running 5,000 ahead of his ticket, met one of his German constituents on the morning after the election of last November.

"Vell, Mr. Badger," said the German, "you runs 5,000 ahead of your ticket, but vas overcome by the landscape."

When Senator Beveridge of Indiana was making his closing speech on the statehood bill he said: "Some of the senators have been trying to prove that things exactly similar are different. They remind me of the young woman who was called on to defend her sex against the charge that no woman on earth can keep a secret.

"'We can too!' she exclaimed. 'It isn't the woman that gives away the secret. It is the people she tells it to that let it out!'"

SENATOR BEVERIDGE.

William Jennings Bryan, while making a stumping tour in 1904, found he would be compelled to wait half an hour or more for his train, says the New York Herald. Taking a seat in the waiting room, he drew forth a cigar and lighted it. Just then a porter entered and, pointing to a sign, said:

"I beg your pardon, sir, but you see that smoking is not allowed here."

"Well," replied Mr. Bryan, "I suppose that rule is not always strictly enforced?"

"Oh, no, sir; neither is the one alongside of it," said the man, with a grin.

The orator glanced at it and read:

"Employees of this railway are not permitted to accept tips."

Mr. Bryan finished his cigar undisturbed.

The police commissioner of New York, William McAdoo, recently ordered a shift of men in important positions in the department, and among those transferred was Inspector George W. McClusky, who is said by his friends to know more about crooks than any other man in the country. In the time of Inspector Byrnes he and another clever detective named Titus were known as "Byrnes' twins." When "Big Chief" Devery was in command of the New York police force he did not get along very well with McClusky. He called him "Chesty George," in allusion to his fondness for being well dressed and putting on a smooth front. It was because of his dressing so well and carrying himself with the air of a Wall street banker that McClusky was frequently detailed for special service at society functions in New York and Washington.

INSPECTOR M'CLUSKY.

He has at different times been in charge of the New York detective bureau. Some years ago, when he was succeeded in that position by a fellow officer, his friends on the force revived that once popular song of Maggie Cline, "T'row Him Down, McClusky."

He was transferred recently from the detective bureau to the borough of the Bronx. Shortly before the transfer occurred a detective named Flay appeared before Magistrate Crane.

"By the way, officer," said the magistrate, "who is at the head of the detective bureau?"

"Inspector McClusky," Flay replied.

"Well," rejoined the magistrate, "if you ever heard of his detecting anything, I haven't."

"I think he is the greatest detective chief New York ever had," Flay declared.

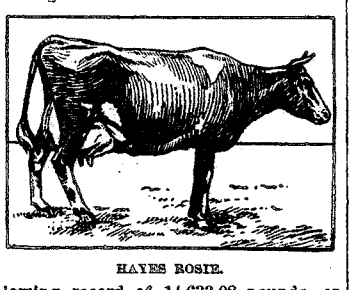
"Then give my respects to the 'greatest detective chief New York ever had,'" said the court, "and tell him for me that he can clean out every thief in this city in twenty-four hours if he wants to."

Dairy and Creamery

A Michigan correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman writes: In response to your call for experiences I would say that for thirty years I have kept cows, for the last six years have kept from ten to fifteen and as yet have never had a case of milk fever. I have always followed about the same method which I now give. I usually permit my cows to go dry from six to eight weeks.

At that time I cut out all grain and use dry hay until the milk is gone. With some cows I have to milk out the milk two or three times. During the winter I feed a small feeding of ensilage and what dry hay or corn fodder they want as soon as they are dry.

When the cow comes in she has dry hay and a warm bran mash twice a day after the first day, with a pail of warm water morning, noon and night for the first week; then I begin feeding a half ration of ensilage, gradually increasing; then at the tenth day give the bran and cottonseed meal with the ensilage. I never give any medicine whatever at this time. In the summer when I wish to dry a cow I take her off the pasture and put in the barn for a week, giving only dry hay and short rations of water. This will dry off the most obstinate milkers. My cows are grade Jerseys.



Ventilate the Barn.

Good care for dairy cows has been taught till now there are model dairy barns here and there all over the country, but there is much yet to be learned by the average farmer dairyman, writes a correspondent of Holstein-Friesian Register. Few now use the straw stack as the cow's main shelter, but we have seen barns to which it might be preferable. As between an absolutely tight, warm barn with no ventilation and one that was all ventilation through its cracks we would choose the latter, but the animal can only produce heat by burning the food in the furnace of the body, so it would be wise to batten up the cracks and provide other ventilation.

Aside from plenty of good food the cardinal wants of any stable are sunlight, cleanliness, fresh air and warmth, and their economical valuation is about in the order named.

A Great Guernsey.

A glance at the illustration of the cow imported Hayes Rosie is sufficient to predict that she is a great dairy cow, says American Cultivator, from which the picture is reproduced. Such she has proved to be by her year's work in connection with the Advanced Register, during which time she made the following record of 14,633.08 pounds, or 6,878 quarts, of milk, averaging 4.92 per cent of butter fat, or a total of 714.31 pounds of butter fat, or 833 pounds of butter. Hayes Rosie was bred and born on the island of Alderney, which is a parish of Guernsey. She is owned by F. Lothrop Ames of North Easton, Mass.

HAYES ROSIE.

Special Cheesemaking.

The fancy cheeses are in growing demand, and the industry should receive more attention. The cheese is made in kettles now manufactured with steam connection. The curd is cooked at a high temperature, and a large waste of fat takes place, which is saved in the better equipped factories by passing the whey through a separator or is hand skimmed. The cheese requires from seventy-five to a hundred days for curing. First it is put in a cellar with a temperature of 65 to 70 degrees, next in a temperature of 60 to 65 degrees and finally in a temperature not above 60 degrees. It is a sweet milk production, yet there are certain ferments apparently demanded for developing its flavor, and especially the "eyes" for which it is noted.—American Cultivator.

Variations In Milk.

The natural variation in the test of a cow's milk and of herd milk is something that is difficult for any one to understand. Careful observations made by testing the milk daily from single cows and from herds have shown that there may be a difference from day to day of as much as 1 per cent fat in the milk even when the milk has not been tampered with by skimming it or by adding water thereto. — Professor Farrington.

Shed For Dairy Cows.

Dairy cows should be provided with an open shed to which they may go at any time during the year. The cold rains of March and April are more trying than the more severe weather of winter. The constitution of the dairy cow is not always particularly strong, and she should be looked after carefully.—American Agriculturist.

The Aborting Cow.

When a cow aborts, the owner not only loses the calf, but until the cow carries a calf to its full time her dairy products are decreased from 25 to 30 per cent below her normal production. A cow which has once aborted is very likely to abort again with her calf.—American Cultivator.

UNFINISHED NOVELS.

TALES THAT WERE STOPPED BY THE HAND OF DEATH.

Nathaniel Hawthorne's Foreboding About "The Dolliver Romance." The Fragment That Stevenson Left. Thackeray's Last Work.

George Gissing's "Varanilda" is a masterpiece that its author did not live to finish. One well known critic considers this tale of the Roman and the Goth the deceased writer's finest work, and, though many may question this judgment, there can exist but universal regret that the romance must forever remain incomplete.

A greater work by a greater writer, "Weir of Hermiston," by R. L. Stevenson, was left a mere fragment, of which the lurid grandeur proved that its creator was taken from us in the zenith of his power. Another romance, "St. Ives," by the same pen, was running in a monthly magazine at the time of his premature death. Here, however, readers were not balked of a satisfactory denouement, for the story was brought to a conclusion by Mr. Quiller-Couch, well known under the nom de plume of "Q."

"I hardly know what to say to the public about this abortive romance, though I pretty well know what the case will be. I shall never finish it," wrote Nathaniel Hawthorne with reference to "The Dolliver Romance," which he had undertaken to write for the Atlantic Monthly. This foreboding was but too soon verified, for the author had scarce time to do more than lay the groundwork of the story and write the initial chapters ere death struck him down.

At his funeral at Concord the scarce commenced manuscript lay upon his coffin. Soon afterward the first chapter appeared in the Atlantic, and subsequently the second chapter, which he had been unable to revise, was published in the same periodical. Several years elapsed when a third fragment, revised and copied by the novelist's wife, was placed in the publisher's hands. The original manuscript is now preserved in the Concord public library.

"Wives and Daughters" was running in the Cornhill when the authoress, Mrs. Gaskell, died. Fortunately the work was nearing its completion, so that, although it was not actually finished by the gifted writer, the plot was sufficiently advanced to enable us to make more than a shrewd guess at the ultimate fate of the characters and to take leave of the hero fully assured of his ultimate happiness.

Another serial that was being written for the same magazine when its author laid down pen forever was "Denis Duval." Thackeray, indeed, was already in his grave when its publication commenced. Three parts and a portion of a fourth were all that appeared, and "the story," wrote the editor, "breaks off as his life ended—full of vigor and blooming with new promise like the apple trees in this month of May." With the fourth part was given a set of notes, taken from Thackeray's own papers, elucidatory of the subsequent development of the plot.

Thackeray's great contemporary, Charles Dickens, died, too, in harness. For long his health had been but indifferent, but he stuck unflinchingly to the work he had in hand. On June 8, 1870, the end came. The morning and part of the afternoon of that day were devoted to completing the sixth number of "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," but scarcely had he finished work and sat down to dinner ere he was seized with a fit. From this he never recovered, but after lingering some hours, without regaining consciousness, died at 6 the next day.

"I shall publish late in this year," wrote Laurence Sterne, "and the next I shall begin a new work in four volumes, which, finished, I shall continue 'Tristram' with fresh spirit." This new work here referred to is the "Sentimental Journey," one volume alone of which was ever given to the world, nor by reason of the author's death was the immortal "Tristram Shandy" ever continued.

"Arcadia," the pastoral romance which Sir Philip Sidney composed at Wilton House, was never completed and ran no small danger of being entirely lost to future generations when its author, before his death, gave orders for its destruction.

Only about 160 manuscript pages of Benjamin Disraeli's last novel, which brought the story up to the first dozen lines of chapter 10, was all that was written when the brilliant writer laid aside his pen forever.

A Barrytown, N. Y., Man's Experience with Cal-cura Solvent.

Dr. David Kennedy's NEW Medicine Cured Him Promptly.

Constipation leads to worse. Often it is the cause of appendicitis. Always it leads to dangerous chronic disease. It should not be neglected, nor should it be temporarily relieved with drastic purgatives. Here is a case in point:

He heard of Cal-cura Solvent, Dr. Kennedy's new medicine, used it and began to improve rapidly All of his old complaints have disappeared and he owes everything to Cal-cura Solvent. $1.00, all druggists.

The Baby Camel.

The baby camel is a curious looking little creature, but one which you would hardly select as a household pet. Like all young beasts, it is playful, in a modified, solemn sort of way, and is as clumsy as it is odd to look upon.

Some one has said that if a camel were rid of its deformity it would be quite a respectable appearing beast. But the hump is in nowise a deformity, and a camel who possessed pride of race would die of shame if such a thing were to happen to him. In other words, he would be a camel freak. And with a baby camel, as his hump grows apace, he, too, becomes unusually proud and consequential.

A Chicago Alderman Owes His Election to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for affections of the throat and lungs," says Hon. John Shenick, 220 South Peoria street, Chicago, "Two years ago during a political campaign, I caught cold after being overheated, which irritated my throat and I was finally compelled to stop, as I could not speak aloud. In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses that afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largely subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won this seat in Council." This remedy is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

HOMES OF THE SWISS.

Pretty and Distinct In Style, but Have a Lonely Appearance.

Swiss houses impress one almost invariably with a sense of loneliness. Probably this may be attributed to the contrast they present to their surroundings. They are commonly dwarfed into insignificance by the gigantic scenery in which they have been placed. But near at hand they are decidedly pretty, although their architectural style is distinct from any other.

They are rarely painted and seldom ornamented or embellished, save that the boards and shingles are not infrequently cut and scalloped into odd shapes. Sometimes the front of a chalet bears the owner's or builder's name in large letters, followed by a sentiment, a benediction or a prayer.

These chalets are provided with overhanging roofs, on which flat stones have been laid to keep the fierce winds from tearing them off and not because—as an animated tailor's sign, with a monocle, once informed an old lady in my presence—the natives wished to effect a saving in nails.

Various fruits and vegetables are hung under the projecting eaves for shelter, and the firewood is piled high without for future use. The ground floor is generally given up to a stable, where the cattle are housed in the winter, in delightful proximity to the family overhead.

The household treasures are contained in the living room, or gute stube. Here, too, you will find the large porcelain stove that is the center of the family gatherings on the long winter evenings. In the kitchen, of course, the furniture is of the plainest description, usually consisting of a rude loom, a huge fireplace, a table and a few chairs.—Pilgrim.

Kodol Dyspepsia Cure will digest any quantity of all the wholesome food you want to eat while your stomach takes a rest—recuperates and grows strong. This wonderful preparation is justly entitled to all of its many remarkable cures. Sold by H. C. Giesler and George T. Boyington.

BEES IN WAR.

Two Instances In Which the Insects Were Used as Weapons.

The beekeeper, holding a number of bees in his hand, said as he led the way through the apiary: "Bees in the past were used as weapons of war. In the siege of Themiscrya, for instance, they played a very important part. The Romans in this siege made mines in the ground, and the enemy, opening the mines from above, threw in upon the Romans bears and other wild animals, together with swarms of bees. That caused the Romans to flee howling.

"Here in my notebook is another account of the use of bees in war. It is an extract from an Irish manuscript in the Bibliotheque Royale at Brussels, and it tells how the Danes and Norwegians attacked Chester and were repulsed, thanks to the use of bees by the Saxons and their allies in the town.

"'The Norwegians,'" read the beekeper, "'sheltered by hurdles, tried to pierce the walls. Then what the Saxons and the Gaedhil did was to throw down large rocks, by which they broke down the hurdles over their heads. What the others did to check this was to place large posts under the hurdles. What the Saxons did next was to put all the beer and water of the town into the caldrons of the town, to boil them and spill them down upon those who were under the hurdles, so that their skins were peeled off. The remedy which the Lochlans applied to this was to place hides on the outside of the hurdles. What the Saxons did next was to throw down all the beehives in the town upon the besiegers, which prevented them from moving their hands or legs from the number of bees which stung them. They afterward deserted and left the city.'"—Chicago Chronicle.

There Is No Disease on Earth

But what can be cured if treated in time and the proper remedy is used. Medical authorities have known for a long time that the berry of the Saw Palmetto is one of the best remedial agents known. Vernal Palmettona (Palmetto Berry Wine) is made from a combination of Palmetto berries and seven other vegetable drugs of well known curative properties, and the remedy is meeting with hitherto unheard of success in the cure of all diseases of the stomach, kidneys, liver and bladder, and the minor ailments that are brought on by diseases of the mucous membrane and impure blood. This remedy works in harmony with nature, and the Vernal Remedy Company, of LeRoy, N. Y., will cheerfully send you, free of charge, a trial bottle and booklet. Do not send any money as they wish to convince you first that the remedy is all or more than they claim for it. It is also sold by druggists everywhere.

Odd Russian Custom.

Eight days after a baby is born in Russia its hair is shaved by a priest. This is snipped off in four places on the top of the head to form a cross. The baby's godfather collects the shorn down, pinching it up with wax from the tapers. It is then thrown into the baptismal font. If the little pellet sinks there is great sadness in the baby's home, for the Russians believe that the child will die before a year has passed.

Impoverished Soil

Impoverished soil, like impoverished blood, needs a proper fertilizer. A chemist by analyzing the soil can tell you what fertilizer to use for different products.

If your blood is impoverished your doctor will tell you what you need to fertilize it and give it the rich, red corpuscles that are lacking in it. It may be you need a tonic, but more likely you need a concentrated fat food, and fat is the element lacking in your system.

SENATOR BACON AS A COOK.

Georgia Statesman Can Talk Well and Make Good Soup.

Senator Augustus O. Bacon of Georgia is known as a stickler for the constitution, and he is constantly on the watch against any infringement of the provisions of that instrument or of the prerogatives of the senate by the executive branch of the government. He recently introduced a resolution asking for an inquiry as to the validity of the protocol with Santo Domingo entered into in January, 1903, by virtue of which the United States has since taken possession of customs duties at certain ports for the settlement of American claims. He is an advocate of independence for the Philippines and introduced the senate resolution on these lines, which was a subject of debate in that body six years ago.

Senator Bacon was born in Georgia in 1839 and is a graduate of the University of Georgia. He began the study of law, but when the civil war broke out he entered the Confederate service, in which he made a brilliant record. On the close of the war he began practice as a lawyer and attained fame as an orator. He was chosen to the legislature of his state and was for several years speaker of the assembly. In 1894 he was chosen to the United States senate and in 1900 was re-elected.

Senator Bacon is noted for his seriousness of character. He seldom jests, but there is one story he tells which has a little joke on himself. The Saturday Evening Post relates that he was once on a fishing trip with Congressman Maddox of Georgia. "One day," says Mr. Maddox, "I caught a big terrapin, and the senator superintended the making of the soup, which was delicious. In preparing the terrapin he had assisting him a colored man who did not know him.

"The colored man was given a bowl of soup and smacked his lips and otherwise displayed his sense of bliss.

"'You like the soup, do you, George?' asked the senator.

"'Deed I do,' was the reply. Then he added:

"'Say, boss, I'd like to ax you a little question.'

"'What is it?' responded the senator. 'Go ahead.'

"'I'd like to know,' said the darky between eager sips of the terrapin soup, 'is you jes' a plain cook or is you a steward, for you do cert'nly know yore business.'"

TREPOFF THE TYRANT.

The Son of Trepoff the Terrible Sustains Family Traditions.

The General Trepoff who was appointed governor general of St. Petersburg on the outbreak of revolutionary demonstrations in that city is the cruel son of a cruel father. The elder Trepoff, who was also a general, was once prefect of St. Petersburg and in that capacity earned the title of Trepoff the Terrible. He died in 1889. His son is following closely in his footsteps and is proud to wear the title of Trepoff the Tyrant. Six attempts on his life have proved unsuccessful, and he is becoming accustomed to such experiences after being stabbed twice and shot at four times. While prefect of police in Moscow he made application to be sent to the front in Manchuria.

"Since I must be shot at," he is quoted as saying, "I prefer to be a target for professional Japanese soldiers rather than for dirty amateurs in Moscow."

Trepoff did not go to the war, however, as the government found congenial work for him in St. Petersburg. It is said that General Kuropatkin did not want him in his command. The ruthless character of the man is illustrated by the fact that he once sabered an orderly who was guilty of some trivial act of disobedience.

Clover on Corn Stubble.

Many people think clover will not make a good set on corn stubble land, but this is a mistaken idea, remarks an Illinois farmer. I have thus seeded my corn stubble for years and never had a failure. When the time comes to make the hay the stubbles are so rotten and brittle that they will not in the least interfere, and if the weeds and wheat stubbles were clipped after harvest the hay will be as fine and clean as the finest from a seed bed that was like a garden.

The miserablest day we live there is many a better thing to do than die.—Dailey.

Commercial Clover Seed.

The Rhode Island experiment station calls attention to the fact of the great variations in clover plants grown from commercial seed. Not only is there individual variation, which is to be expected, but apparently much of the seed sold for Mammoth clover is not Mammoth clover at all. There is apparently good reason for taking every possible precaution to procure good seed, true to name.

STEPHENS OPERA HOUSE.

The Holy City.

The Holy City will be presented at Stephens Opera House on Tuesday evening, March 14. The Jamestown, (N. Y.) Morning Post refers to the production in the following manner:

"Last evening the greatest tragedy of the world's history was re enacted at the Samuels Opera House under the title of the "Holy City." The play presented scenes from the Holy Land during the life of Christ, bringing in John the Baptist, Caiaphas, Herodias, Salome, her daughter, Herod, Pontius Pilate, Mary Magdalene, four of the disciples, and many others of lesser note.

The first scene, by the River Jordan, brought in Caiaphas and others discussing John the Baptist; then Herod and Herodias entered, and John sent for. Upon his arrival the forerunner turns upon the king and denounces him as well as the priesthood, and through the efforts of Herodias is seized and imprisoned. This act was made notable by the magnificent acting of Raymond Gilbert as John the Baptist and Pontius Pilate. Mr. Gilbert is an artist, and enters fully into the spirit of the character. The tragedy requires such constant display of emotion that it is necessary for the actors to have every nerve constantly strained. The part of Marius, the young Roman, a prominent one, was taken by Clyde D. Callicotte, who was splendid in the parts where strong acting became necessary. Another who acquitted himself creditably was C. M. Greene as Caiaphas. The ladies of the troupe all acquitted themselves well, the parts of Herodias and Salome being presented by ladies who are splendid types of Oriental beauty.

The scenery was magnificent and the costuming accurate. Altogether the play was one of the best that has ever been presented in this city."

The Cheap Farms of the East.

The annual address of Secretary Ellsworth of the Massachusetts state board of agriculture affords some interesting statements about the so called abandoned farms of the state. A few years ago 747 of the 45,010 farms of Massachusetts were advertised as unoccupied farms for sale. Of this number 334 have been sold and 121 withdrawn from advertisement. Last year 600 requests for information about cheap farms, coming from thirty-seven states and territories and twenty foreign countries, were received by the board, indicating the interest that many people are taking in these cheap lands of Massachusetts, an interest which also extends to the other New England states.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists at 75 cents.

The Cynic.

"Let me see, a cynic is a man who is tired of the world, is he not?" the young student of language asked.

"No, no, my child," replied the knowing tutor. "A cynic is a man of whom the world is tired."—Pick-Me-Up.

THE HOME GARDEN

If your's is not an old fashioned garden, have at least a small region somewhere in which you can sow plenty of the easy growing annuals, such as marigolds, china asters, petunias and phloxes. And, by the way, very handsome among the newer strains of petunias is the "Star"—rich crimson, with a distinct white star in the center.

The Touch Artistic.

Most of the flowering shrubs bloom in the early part of the year, such as Lilac, Golden Bell, Judas, Deutzia, Spiraeas and dozens of others. These plants, if in borders by themselves, are apt to be dull and uninteresting at other seasons.

It is astonishing what a difference a few hardy perennials, judiciously placed, will make. A clump of scarlet phlox here or a white one there or the aristocratic lilies growing in little recesses or a bold clump of the tall larkspur changes the whole effect.—Meehan.

Concerning the Blackberries.

In starting blackberry plants it is not amiss to assume that, while they do not require really rich soil, it is well they should have an average fair chance along with other plants. If plants were mulched last fall, remove the mulch this spring, cultivate well and cut out all winter killed canes, so as to give the young green shoots a fair field.

Divide Rhubarb Plants.

Old, run out rhubarb plants may be divided and replanted in March.

Remember the Roses.

Give a little thought to the roses—not the queenly "florists' roses," but the wild roses and their hybrids. For the home garden and the busy home gardener they are a treasure. One of the hybrids is the Japanese Rosa Rugosa, with very glossy foliage and graceful flower clusters and so hardy and sturdy that it may even be used to form a rose hedge. Then there are the lovely sweetbrier or Lord Penzance roses, crosses of the common brier with garden roses. There are many varieties of these sweet scented favorites, ranging from pale yellow to crimson and single or semidouble.

Where the Bee Sucks.

The bees will delight in a patch of white Dutch clover, and this can be sown in March or April.

These notes are but respectful general reminders. Latitude and local conditions will, of course, modify their appropriateness.

SUPREME COURT JUSTICE

No Disposition on the Part of the Republican Electors to Deal Unfairly with Any Candidate for the Office.

We do not believe there exists a desire on the part of the Republican electors in this judicial district to deal unfairly with any candidate for the Supreme Court bench. It is a position to which any eminent attorney may aspire, and no adverse criticism should be launched at one who posesses the ability to discharge the duties of the office and who has an ambition to wear the ermine.

The Hon. P. W. Cullinan has announced his candidacy for the position, and a sentiment is being aroused in his favor because he is well and favorably known, not only throughout the district, but in the State, where he has made an ideal official—first as the legal adviser, and later as the chief executive of the Excise Department. Mr. Cullinan has had long experience as an attorney, his diversified practice making him familiar with every phase of legal learning, and he has achieved a reputation in the courts of the State which needs no enconium.

That he would reflect credit on the position can not be disputed and his friends will do their utmost not only to secure him the nomination but also to elect him to the office.

Unfortunately a disposition has been manifested on the part of some in this county to hold early primaries for the sake of gaining an advantage, and while it may be conceded that the towns have a perfect right to do as they please in this respect, yet it does not look like a "square deal" when undue haste is manifested on the part of over-zealous partizans to crowd a candidate through.

In reference to the Constantia caucus, Mr. Cullinan states that he knew nothing about it, but was satisfied to follow the time-honored usages of the party and would oppose the calling of any primary out of the general order.

The contest can not fail to arouse a deep interest on the part of the Republican electors who will settle the question at the primaries as far as party preference is concerned. But let there be no unfair advantage taken.

FULTON HUMANE SOCIETY.

Annual Meeting and Election of Officers for Ensuing Year.

The annual meeting of the Fulton Humane Society was held at the residence of Mr. Arthur Gilbert on Friday evening, March 10, at which time the following S. P. C. C. officers were elected:

President, Thomas Hunter, vice-presidents, Mr. Arthur Gilbert, Mrs. A. Youmans; secretary, Mrs. Edna Moore; treasurer, Mrs Janet Sears; superintendent, Mr. Charles Atwood; attorneys, Messrs. Piper, Rice & Wilson; physicians, Drs. Harriet Doane, H. L. Lake, E. A. Gladman.

Executive Committee — Messrs. A. Gilbert, A. Rice, John Hunter.

Board of Directors—Thomas Hunter, Mrs. G. C. Webb, Mrs. Edna Moore, Mr. and Mrs. A. Gilbert, John Hunter, G. S. Piper, A. Rice, Charles Atwood.

Clothing and Visiting Committee—Mrs. Sears, Mrs. A. Gilbert, Mrs. G. C. Webb, Mrs. A. Youmans.

The officers for the S. P. C. A. are the same, with the exception that Mrs. George Chauncey was elected vice-president, Messrs. R. B. Hunter and W. J. Lovejoy members of the Executive Committee and Dr. E. H. Nodyne the physician.

A FEW FACTS FROM THE SECRETARY'S BOOK.

In January 1904, the grade teachers of the city schools were provided with Humane calendars, as helps to instruct the pupils in kindness to animals. In the early part of the year, the Fulton Society united with other societies in the State for the prevention of cruelty to animals in placing themselves on record as supporting a bill prohibiting the docking of horses' tails and requiring the registering of all docked horses. The investigation of a carload of calves and hogs at the D., L. & W. station, found them in a starving condition. They were provided with food and the bill for the same sent to the firm to whom the stock was billed. The account was promptly paid with a promise that the occurrence would not be repeated.

In March, 1904, the secretary sent a copy of New York State report to each minister of the city and an effort was made to have a sermon in May by the pastor of each church on some phase of humane work, but without success so far as reported.

In looking over the records for the year, we find that twenty-seven cases were investigated by Mr. Green. One case of a boy nine years of age who had swallowed a brass tag, gangrene followed. The mother was unable to have the boy treated. The society cared for the child and he recovered.

The society was instrumental in having an appliance purchased for a child two years of age, who had never walked. It was of great benefit to the child.

In a majority of the twenty-seven cases referred to, a constant oversight has been necessary, requiring many visits during the year.

This fourteenth annual meeting of the Fulton Humane Society is the first to record the absence of our beloved Mr. Green. Only the records above will show his increasing efforts and untiring faithfulness in behalf of the unfortunate, and there is no way in which the community can more highly honor his name than by helping to carry forward the work so sacred to him.

PATHFINDER BOAT CLUB

Increase of Membership Fee—Annual Meeting and Election of Officers.

The annual meeting of the Pathfinder Boat Club was held last evening in the City Hall, at which time reports of the several committees were read and approved and the two directors—Messrs. W. F. Hill and H. Putnam Allen—whose terms of office had expired, were re-elected. The members requested the Board of Directors to call a special meeting for the purpose of increasing the annual dues and initiation fees.

At an adjourned meeting on Wednesday morning the following officers were elected: President, G. C. Webb; vice president, George E. True; secretary, Earl S. Brown; treasurer, Chas. S. Hall.

Island Committee—T. H. Webb, chairman; S. B. Mead and E. A. Putnam. In obedience to a request of the membership, the price of ordinary meals at the club house will be 25 cents for members and 35 cents for guests. This rate does not include meals to order.

A special meeting has been called by the Board of Directors for Tuesday, April 11, at the City Hall, when an amendment to the constitution and bylaws will be presented, authorizing an increase of the initiation fee from $5 to $10, and the annual dues from $2 to $3.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

Rules Governing Milk and Meat—Regulations Will Be Adopted and Printed.

The members of the Board of Health met last Wednesday evening and Dr. D. E. Lake presented a report of the inspection which had been made of the milk delivered by the dealers in this city by the Department of Agriculture of New York State. The best in quality showed a percentage of 4.6, and the poorest a percentage of 2.8. It was thought expedient to adopt a set of milk and meat regulations similar to those of the Board of Health of Oswego, which will be printed.

The regulations will require the payment of $1 license for each milk wagon or sleigh; $1 for each inspection of premises where a dairy is kept; 5 cents for the examination of each cow, and 25 cents for each mile traveled by the veterinary inspector, one way.

An important section of the regulations, and one that will interest all users of milk in Fulton, is as follows: "All milk cans, vessels, pails and utensils used by vendors, delivery men or by dairies, must be thoroughly rinsed with cold water and then thoroughly cleansed with hot water, and then scalded with boiling water inside and out daily, and daily aired in pure, dry air and kept sweet and clean. In no case shall any bottle be filled or refilled elsewhere than at the dairy where it has been cleansed, as herein provided."

The Board of Health met on Monday evening and appointed Dr. Nodyne meat and milk inspector under the new rules and regulations recently adopted.

Brotherhood of St. Paul Entertain.

The members of the Brotherhood of St. Paul of the First M. E. Church entertained their friends on Friday evening last, about one hundred and twenty-five men being present.

Mr. L. W. Ford, cartoonist, gave one of his celebrated lectures and illustrated it from time to time with cartoons, drawn in his own inimitable manner, and demonstrating beyond question his remarkable talent as a newspaper illustrator. Mr. Holley favored the assemblage with an excellent solo.

An enjoyable feature of the evening's entertainment was contributed by Prof. George Wilson and his orchestra, which gave several selections that were greatly appreciated by the Brotherhood and their friends. After the program, refreshments were served.

KAPLAN'S STORE BURNED.

Prompt Action of Fire Department Averted Serious Conflagration.

A fire occurred in M. Kaplan's store in Stephen's block, Cayuga street, last Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, which resulted in seriously damaging stock and gutting store. The origin of the fire is involved in mystery. An explosion occurred which blew out the plate-glass front, caused, as it is stated, by the stove tipping over, and the fire coming in contact with a can of gasoline. The flames spread rapidly and had it not been for the prompt arrival of the fire department, which in an incredibly short time had four streams of water playing on it, without doubt the entire block would have been destroyed. Holes were cut in the roof of the building, and Chief Harry Waugh, in an effort to confine the flames to narrow limits, ascended to the second story, and in the impenetrable smoke, fell through a hole in the ceiling, but fortunately caught on the rafters and escaped serious injury.

The fire was confined to the section occupied by Kaplan's store and O'Brien barber shop, the interior of these places being completely ruined. Some damage was done to the upper floor by fire and considerably more by the volume of water and smoke, the loss of the residents being uninsured.

Griffin's pool and billiard parlors and Walker's barber shop were somewhat damaged by smoke and water, no insurance being carried. It could not be learned in what agency Kaplan had any insurance, his stock being valued at something like $800. Kaplan stated, however, that he was insured for $300.

The loss to the building owned by J. M. and C. E. Foster, is covered by insurance in the agencies of Streeter & Platt and Whitaker and Lovejoy.

Volney Paper Company.

The directors of the Volney Paper Company were elected for the ensuing year on Monday as follows: Messrs. A. G. Gilbert, B. W. Bennett, Frank Dilts, Walter Bradley, G. G. Chauncey, of this city; H. A. Nichols, New York City and F. A. Emerick, Oswego. The officers will be elected on Monday.

RICHARDSON THEATRE.

The Show Girl.

Whitney's superb musical production of the latest success, "The Show Girl," will be seen at the Richardson Theatre, Oswego, Thursday evening, March 16.

The piece is described as "a jolly bit of tomfoolery." The book is by the author of those foremost successes such as "1492," "Little Christopher," "Excelsior Jr.," "The Girl from Paris," etc. H. L. Heartz and E. W. Corliss are responsible for the music, the tunefulness of which is largely due for the cordial reception accorded the piece in New York, Boston and all the other large eastern cities.

Among the musical numbers, which have become popular and which has been receiving encore upon encore, are: "Come down Mister Man in the moon," "Nelly Kelly," "That's the way of a sailor," "Sometimes perhaps," "I don't want to be a lady," "Seminole," "I'm the manager," "Psyche," "Champagne and Terrapin," "In Zanzibar," "Dolly Dimple" "Reggie's family tree," and "One that he loves best."

Champion Liniment for Rheumatism.

Charles Drake, a mail carrier at Chapinville, Conn., says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the champion of all liniments. The past year I was troubled a great deal with rheumatism in my shoulder. After trying several cures, the storekeeper here recommended this remedy and it completely cured me." There is no use of anyone suffering from that painful ailment when this liniment can be obtained for a small sum. One application gives prompt relief and its continued use for a short time will produce a permanent cure. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

GREAT BROWNING COMPANY.

Most Interesting and Pleasing Show at the Opera House.

One of the most entertaining and interesting performances offered at the Opera House this season was given last week by The Great Browning and his company of Oriental Wonder Workers. Theatre goers found much to enjoy in this remarkable entertainment. The feature of the program was the clairvoyant reverie or mind-reading of "Cleoto," the mystic marvel, who answered any question of past, present or future that any person in the audience requested. Her answers were wonderfully accurate and every one present was amazed and mystified by her marvelous powers.

The cabinet work of Professor Browning surpassed interest and mystery anything of a similar nature presented here. The vaudeville features were refined and up-to-date and a remarkably clever illusion was performed by the three Menoughs, wherein a young woman was suspended and floated in mid-air without any apparent support. Altogether the show was bright, fascinating and strange and its merit and novelty commends it to the entire show-going public.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

ORCHARD AND SMALL FRUITS

Spraying, Planting Cuttings and Other Early Spring Work.

The San Jose scale must be squarely met. Early spring applications of the lime, salt and sulphur mixture have given very good results in Maryland. T. B. Symons of College Park says this season seems the most favorable time, on the whole, for applying the wash.

Dr. John B. Smith of New Jersey clings to his faith in the oil sprays, believing them to be "the most reliable of all scale killers." Of course they must be applied while the tree is still dormant, and many persons distrust the oil spray at any time, claiming that it often kills the trees. For the pear especially Dr. Smith recommends the crude petroleum spray, 43 degrees test, slightly warmed and used through a fine vermorel nozzle any time after Jan. 1, before the trees start into growth.

Set the Cuttings Out Early.

Cuttings made in the fall or winter should be planted out very early in the spring before the weather warms up much. As a general rule, in inserting cuttings only two buds are left above ground and in the vine only one. Long cuttings are set sloping to be in reach of heat and air.

A Generous Fruit Supply Is Easy.

Some fruits are so easily propagated that if one grows them at all there is really small excuse for not having them in generous profusion. Layering is a sure and simple way to increase the grape, the quince and the gooseberry. It is done in the spring, before vegetation begins, using a shoot of the previous year's growth. Dig the ground up light and fine, bend over a branch and make a cut through the bark and part of the wood at the base of a bud, splitting the shoot for an inch or two. Lay the branch down, keeping the cut open, and cover with two or three inches of soil.

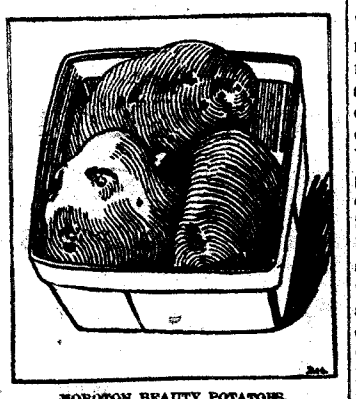
Don't Begin Unless You Can Hold On.

There is one thing to be remembered about the new mulch method in orchards, and fruit growers are now passing the weaning round. The mulch encourages root growth near the surface. Therefore it is dangerous to practice it for a few years and then discontinue it, for this leaves the roots exposed to injury from freezing in winter.

Items of Value.

Prune fruit trees early, preferably between March 15 and April 15, says Professor Taft of Michigan.

Pretty near to a razor edge is what the pruning knife needs.



Advantages of clean culture in the orchard—fewer insects and the diseased fruit that drops can be more readily gathered and destroyed.

The Fall Beauty is a very taking, richly colored apple of good quality, originating in Virginia and first brought into notice recently.

A NEW EARLY POTATO.

Believed to Mark an Era in Potato Growing, as Did the Early Rose.

Early Rose, Beauty of Hebrew, Rural New Yorker, the world famous Carman No. 1 and Carman No. 3, these and others have marked the path of progress in potato growing in the last forty years. With 1905 steps forward a new claimant to a place, and perhaps the first place, in the front rank. It is Noroton Beauty, "a lineal descendant of the famous Peachblow, being a seedling from a seedling of that variety," according to its introducers, who summarize its points of merit as follows:

NOROTON BEAUTY POTATOES.

"It is the earliest potato ever grown, being sixteen days earlier than the Early Rose.

"It is fully as productive as any main crop or late sort.

"It is handsome in appearance and more uniform in size and shape than any other variety.

"The tubers mature simultaneously, a fact which, combined with its extreme earliness, practically does away with danger from blight or disease or bugs.

"Its table quality is superb, and it keeps longer than any other sort, early or late.

"It is the best all around potato in existence."

Noroton (accented on the second syllable) is an Indian name and refers to the town of Noroton, Conn.

The Ideal Saddle Horse.

The ideal saddle horse is from fifteen to sixteen hands high, short backed and well coupled. It has thin, high withers, a long, well arched neck and a long, keen ear well set on the head. The tail should be set high on the rump, and the rump itself should be somewhat sloping. The horse should have besides flat, sinewy bones in its legs and a medium sized foot.—Country Life in America.

Fulton Bloods.

Hauum's Hall, Feb. 17, 1895.

A party of Fulton's premier young men decided to show their best girls the contrast between town and country life.

This they did by having an "old fashioned" straw ride, making this place their destination. After disposing of a sumptuous twenty-five cent repast, they danced till the wee sma' hours. Then gladdening the hearts of the orchestra with thirty-seven cents each, they merrily jingled back to the whirl of the busy town.

The orchestra looking at each other along the bar softly whispered "how" was it done.

Come again, generous youths.

THE GAIT OF THE DRAFTER.

From the Standpoint of Greatest Utility and Ease In Work.

The majority of the duties of draft horses is performed at the walk, consequently the gait of the drafter is of great importance in relation to his value. A very good observation of the walk of the draft horse is from a front, side and rear view. Note when the horse is coming to you that his head is up well and that his movement is regular, the feet carried clear of the ground and evenly placed square and with deliberation. When the back is short and under line long the legs will be handled in a harmonious, prompt manner, and when the loin is weak and back long almost the reverse is seen in the action, a kind of dragging motion and unsteadiness in the gait.

This represents the foot and leg, showing about the proper slope of the pastern when the horse is standing, and the line down through the center of the leg should come back of the heel.

From the rear view the hocks should be carefully inspected as the hind feet are raised from the ground, to see that the hocks are neither turned inward nor outward, but that the movement is in line without deviation or "wobble" in being carried forward with energy, force and elasticity. While it is not expected to find a fast trotter in the draft horse, his even, smooth, springy action at that gait is a strong indication that he is nearer sound than if his action is stiff, "staky" or jerky. When the hocks are too straight and irregularly set the action will be of a "stilty" character and short. It should be observed that the action from a side view shows the knees and hocks well flexed and carried in their forward movement in harmony with each other without any hesitancy of action in either.

As the action of the horse is of the very first importance in summing up his estimated value after all other parts have been inspected, he should be tried in a quiet manner to find if he does his work of his own free will or is forced to it for the moment by either feed and rest or the stimulating effect of the whip. If it is the first he will turn out to be all you have expected. If the second and the trial is extended until his "play spell" is over his true nerve force is determined. But if it is the third and the whip is laid aside he will tell the whole story very soon.—J. C. Curryer in National Stockman.

Woman's Progress Uplifts Man.

The grange may be called the liberator of the American farmer's wife, as it was the first organization that gave to woman the same privileges and rights enjoyed by man. In doing this it has not only turned on the radiant light of hope for her, but it has strengthened the union of both, has created deeper love for home and given inspiration for better thoughts, nobler deeds and higher aims for the future. Men need more of the refining influence of women. There is nothing that so refines a man as a good woman, and no audience, association or organization with woman eliminated can be so modest, so refined or so complete as with woman in it.—Grange Bulletin.

A FEW ALFALFA ITEMS.

Its Cultivation Increasing—Likely to Be Boomed by Inoculation.

It might seem that the last word had already been said about alfalfa. On the contrary, however, interest in it appears to be perennial, like the plant itself. Its culture has steadily spread in the east and south, and now soil inoculation promises to push it along still faster. Alfalfa being long lived, it is not advisable to lay down land to this crop unless it can be left undisturbed for years. It is claimed that alfalfa fields near some of the old California missions were sown fifty years ago. As spring is the general seeding time, here are some facts and hints that may prove useful.

Getting a Stand.

The most important requisite for success with alfalfa is a permeable, well drained subsoil, in which the water level does not rise higher than six or eight feet below the surface. The soil should be tolerably rich or in the condition known to farmers as "in good heart." With this proviso alfalfa will succeed on soils of a very diverse nature, ranging from the lightest of sandy loams to heavy clay. The seed bed must be deep, well firmed, but mellow, and with a smooth surface.

Weeds and irregularities in the surface of the land are the two chief causes of failure to keep alfalfa fields on a paying basis. When sown alone fifteen to twenty-five pounds of alfalfa are used per acre, and it is generally conceded that in regions where there is at times great lack of soil moisture alfalfa thrives best without a nurse crop.

Notions About Clover Seeding.

There is a great difference of opinion among farmers as to the best time to sow clover and also how to prepare the ground. Some say sow early in February on oats or wheat, others say sow in the fall, and there are various other plans advocated.

From my own experience and observation I would rather run the risk of clover being killed by dry weather than being killed by a freeze. Clover will stand a good deal of the former, but none of the latter if it is just started. It is not too late to sow clover seed in May if you cannot sow it earlier—better then than not at all—but the ideal time is the 1st of April.

Taking one year with another, I find the best plan is to break the ground about three inches deep and harrow it, going the first time the way the breaking was done, then cross harrow and roll it if necessary. When the ground is in fine shape sow one bushel of recleaned seed to five acres, and never fail to run a light harrow over the ground after the sowing. A great many think this is not necessary, but I have seen it tried both ways and think it is. By harrowing the seed are covered so they will sprout right away, and they are in the ground so the roots of the plant can go down deeply and quickly into the soil, and this enables the plant to withstand dry weather better.—An Illinois Farmer.

THE conviction of Mrs. Chadwick revealed that her nerves were not equal to the nerve she displayed during her meteoric career.

OUR readers should bear in mind that the added postscript of "burn this letter," often has the reverse effect. It frequently happens that such letters are placed in "cold storage."

IT has been wisely suggested by the Hartford Times that the battle flags captured over forty years ago from the Confederacy be placed permanently in a great "hall of fame" at the National Capitol, together with the flags of the armies of the Union, for the eyes of future generations to contemplate, as the most striking memorials of the great historical struggle which ended in the final establishment of our "indissoluble union" in 1865.

THE citizens of Japan are teaching the world a lesson in patriotism. Many heroic sacrifices are being made by the children of the Mikado. Family treasures are sold for a song; ancestral images are offered in the open market; daily food is reduced to the last limit of sustaining power, in order that the troops may keep in the field. It was hoped that the capture of Mukden by the Japanese would bring the gigantic struggle to a close, but Kuropatkin, with the extricated portion of his army, will stubbornly resist capture as long as possible. While it is hoped that the concluding battle may not be far distant, the conflicts have shown the Japanese officers and men to be superior to any in the world, and Field Marshal Oyama is classed by military critics as one of the greatest commanders since the days of the First Napoleon.

D. A. R. Meeting

The monthly meeting Kayendatyona Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, was held on Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. James Vincent, 113 Rochester street. Illness and absence from the city prevented the attendance of some of the most loyal among the Daughters, but a goodly number, interested and enthusiastic, responded to the call. The business was promptly despatched and an interchange of opinions upon matters of importance to the Chapter followed. To add to the enjoyment and interest of the assembly, Mrs. Nellis M. Rich, of Syracuse, president of the Society of Children of the American Revolution, who was a guest for the day in the home of the Regent, gave a delightful talk upon practical matters which are now engaging the attention of all connected with Onondaga Chapter, of which she is a prominent member.

Two instructive papers, by the Osgood sisters, were read. Miss Elizabeth had for her subject, "The Boston tea party," and Miss Jennie discoursed on some of the characteristics which marked the genius and patriotism of Patrick Henry. It was an excellent meeting and the business, literary work and refreshments were all of the best.

A social will be given this (Wednesday) evening at the home of the Universalist minister, 113 Rochester street. A pleasant time is expected.

The Universalist Minister Resigns.

The congregation of the Universalist church of this city was surprised last Sunday morning when the Rev. Dr. Vincent gave notice of his resignation to take effect April 1. For more than seven years he has been the minister; a longer time than any clergyman of the city except Father Kearney. It is also with an exception the longest pastorate in the history of this church. During his stay, many improvements upon the church property and methods of work have been made and the society, financially, socially and religiously, is in excellent condition and has before it a clear road toward continuous success and growth in the things which render a church a power for good throughout an entire community.

We've Been Sawing Wood All Winter.

That is to say that The International Tailoring Company of New York and Chicago has been hunting up all the latest ideas in design and fabric and has placed them in our hands ready for your inspection. This great concern has the reputation of "doing things" and that is one reason that we recommend them to the discerning people of this community. Their line of samples for Spring and Summer shows that in every sense of the word they've been "sawing wood." There are over Five Hundred Styles to select from and every one's a good one and thoroughly up-to-date. COMMON COUNCIL.

Property Leased for City Market—Grievance Day for Third Street Property Owners—Indigent Patients.

An adjourned meeting of the Common Council was held last Thursday evening, and among the matters of importance transacted was the adoption of a resolution to lease the lot belonging to Mrs. W. J. Watson, corner of Erie and Second streets, for a term of five years at a rental of $52 a year, to be used as a city market.

Regarding the assessment of $2,411.49 against property owners for the Third street improvement work, the Council appointed Wednesday, March 29, as grievance day.

On motion of Alderman Brown the council adopted an order relieving the city chamberlain of the necessity of keeping his office open on Saturday afternoons.

On motion of Alderman Russell the reports of the city chamberlain and the commissioner of charities for the month of February were received and placed on file. The report of the board of education was referred to the finance committee.

The bonds of the city engineer, Joseph H. Young, in the sum of $5,000, and of the city chamberlain, John T. Hargraves, in the sum of $4,000, were approved by the council.

The city clerk was authorized to draw orders upon the city chamberlain for the sums of $3,130, $3,400 and $1,858.33, the first payable to the First National bank, the second to the Citizens' National and the third to the First National, the first and second being payments upon notes due March 20th and the third payment upon an old village indebtedness.

Alderman Russell reported that he had been successful in compromising with the president of the city hospital upon the sum of $5 a week for each indigent patient. The council adopted a resolution authorizing the commissioner of charities to pay $5 a week per patient to the hospital.

A notice has been received by Attorney William S. Hillick that the Appellate division of the Supreme Court in session at Rochester; has confirmed the decision of the referee in the case of Emily Hotchkiss against D. E. Mr. Hillick was attorney for Mrs. Hotchkiss, and Piper, Rice & Wilson represented the estate. By the decision of the referee, Mrs. Hotchkiss is awarded about $600, which would otherwise have gone to the State, Mrs. Kirk having left no heirs.

City Physicians and Surgeons.

At a meeting of the City Physicians and Surgeons' Association, held on Thursday evening in the City Hall, a paper on "appendicitis" was read by Dr. L. Fowler Joy. It was determined to take concerted action against those who would not pay for medical attendance. This did not include the "poor" of the city.

Resolutions were adopted asking that the office of city physician be abolished; that instead of a city physician there be appointed by the Mayor or Common Council one physician for each of the Supervisor districts of the city, to serve for a period of one year, at an annual salary of $50 and such additional salary as the appointing power may from time to time direct. Such physicians to have been actual residents of the city for three years prior to their appointment and not to be reappointed for a period of two years, unless it appears that no other physician is eligible, or will not accept such appointment; that the city charter be amended to conform with the general health laws of the State concerning the members, powers and duties of Boards of Health for cities of the second class; that the health officer be appointed in accordance with said State health laws at an annual salary of not less than $200 or such increased amount of salary as the Common Council may from time to time determine.

There is one rational way to treat nasal catarrh; the medicine is applied direct to the affected membrane. The remedy is Ely's Cream Balm. It restores the inflamed tissues to a healthy state without drying all the life out of them and it gives back the lost senses of taste and smell. The sufferer who is tired of vain experiments should use Cream Balm. Druggists sell it for 50 cents. Ely Brothers, 56 Warren street, New York, will mail it.

Fire and Police Commissioners.

At a meeting of the Fire and Police Commissioners, held on Monday evening, it was decided not to accept the team of horses recently selected because of a blemish on one of the animals.

Peter Massaro was appointed interpreter and special policeman without compensation.

An opinion was expressed by City Attorney Mead that the money paid by the insurance companies to the fire department actually belonged to the city, should be applied to the fire fund and used as the Board of Fire and Police Commissioners desired.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists at 75 cents.

Governor Herrick of Ohio feelingly and truthfully remarked the other day that "the man in public office," and the editor of a newspaper are much alike in one respect. The critic of a newspaper is at all times ready to admit that he could do much better than the editor. It is very easy for the citizen, while not wearing the often galling harness of responsibility, to call down his editor or his representative in public office, viewing as he does, their acts only from his own standpoint, and environment, not appreciating, because he does not take the time to make a study of the situation and all that surrounds them in their position."

Unfair Discrimination.

A woman may vote as a stockholder upon a railroad from one end of the country to the other, but if she sells her stock and buys a house with the money she has no voice in the laying out of the road before her door which her house is taxed to keep and pay for. Why, in the name of good sense, if a responsible human being may vote upon specific industrial projects may she not vote upon the industrial regulation of the state?—George William Curtis.

Famous Folk Who Are In the News

"WHEN I was civil service commissioner," said President Roosevelt at luncheon the other day, "I served part of the time with those two distinguished gentlemen, Commissioners Lyman and Johnson. Johnson was a southerner, and he used to terrorize us at times. It was his custom to carry a sword cane and a pistol, and he would bang them down on the table and say, 'Now let's get down to business.'

"I am reminded of a case that came before us one day—the case of a letter carrier who was accused of assault and battery.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

"'What's this?' roared Johnson. 'What's this? Assault and battery? I'm for him, sir; I'm for him. I have been accused with intent to kill, sir—with intent to kill—and I'm for him.'

"Really, it was quite embarrassing," the president continued. "I couldn't go to the floor among the spittoons with him, for his people would have commended him and mine would have condemned me. Still I was prepared. Each day when I went to the table with him to discuss matters of official routine I placed before me a large, square glass inkstand. It was always ready. The ink would have confused him had it been necessary to throw the inkstand, and the corners were angular—were angular—gentlemen."

Former Senator Billy Mason one day entered a Washington store and asked to see some neckties. He was told that the ties before him were a quarter each. "Do I look like a man who would wear a quarter necktie?" he asked good naturedly. "I beg your pardon," said the clerk, "but fifteen cent neckties are on the other counter."

Dr. William Osler, who recently caused a sensation by stating that a man above forty is comparatively useless and that men of sixty ought to be retired or chloroformed, has just severed his connection with Johns Hopkins university to become regius professor of medicine at Oxford. Professor Osler did not himself become famous until he was past forty. He was talking during his recent Canadian tour about the importance of precision in the writing of prescriptions.

DR. WILLIAM OSLER.

"Wherever a sentence may have two meanings," said Dr. Osler, "rest assured that the wrong meaning will be taken. Hence it is important in prescription writing and in directions to patients that the greatest clarity and precision be obtained.

"A young foreigner one day visited a physician and described a common malady that had befallen him.

"'The thing for you to do,' the physician said, 'is to drink hot water an hour before breakfast every morning.'

"'Write it down, doctor, so I won't forget it,' said the patient.

"Accordingly the physician wrote the directions down—namely, that the young man was to drink hot water an hour before breakfast every morning.

"The patient took his leave, and in a week he returned.

"'Well, how are you feeling?' the physician asked.

"'Worse, doctor, worse, if anything,' was the reply.

"'Ahem! Did you follow my advice and drink hot water an hour before breakfast?'

"'I did my best, sir,' said the young man, 'but I couldn't keep it up more'n ten minutes at a stretch.'"

There will be three "boy congressmen" from the state of Illinois in the next house of representatives who were elected under circumstances seldom paralleled in the annals of politics. Anthony Michalek, Zeno J. Rives and Charles S. Wharton form a congressional trio which could not be matched in any state of the Union.

The most remarkable character of the three is Michalek, the youngest of the group, who is only twenty-six. He is known as "The Ghetto Kid." He represents the Fifth Illinois district, which includes that part of Chicago where Mrs. O'Leary's cow kicked over the lantern and caused the great fire of 1871. This district is inhabited largely by Bohemians, Jews, Germans and Irish. Michalek himself was born in Bohemia, one of eight children, and was brought to the Chicago ghetto as a boy. He attended school, but for the most part has educated himself and during his campaign was able to talk to his audiences in Bohemian, Yiddish and English. When Michalek got the Republican nomination nobody supposed he would be elected, and his Democratic opponent, a millionaire brewer, was so confident of election that he rented a hall in which to celebrate his triumph. He is said to have spent $50,000 in his campaign. Michalek spent $50. He could not afford to spend more, for he is a bookkeeper earning $12 per week. After March 4 his income will go up to almost $100 per week.

ANTHONY MICHALEK.

Charlie Wharton and Charlie McGavin are two young lawyers in the office of the city attorney of Chicago. Both were chosen to congress last November, Wharton from the Fourth district and McGavin from the Eighth, and both wiped out large Democratic majorities of former years in their respective districts. Mr. Wharton is twenty-nine, never ran for office before and had no money to spend in beating a candidate who had unlimited funds and a strong party organization behind him, together with a normal Democratic majority of 10,000 in his favor. But he did his best. He went over every inch of his district, even stopping strangers on the street and talking over the situation with them. Nevertheless he was a very much surprised man on the morning after election.

CHARLES WHARTON.

"If they keep on indicting senators," said Champ Clark of Missouri, "they will soon be using a formula like this when they vote: 'Mr. President, my colleague, Senator Blank, is unavoidably detained in the penitentiary. Were he present he would vote aye.'"

The Republican nomination for congress in the Twenty-first Illinois district had to be forced on Zeno J. Rives. He didn't spend a cent on his campaign, didn't make a speech and didn't leave his home town of Litchfield. Yet he won over his Democratic opponent, Congressman B. F. Caldwell, by 2,000 votes, though the normal Democratic plurality is 5,000. Rives is a lawyer, but his practice is so small that he thought himself fortunate in holding down a job as city clerk of Litchfield at $50 per month. His father is janitor of a school building, and the family have always been poor. Rives got a good education, however, and is ambitious. One day last autumn he dropped into a Republican convention which was in progress. Several men had been named as candidate for congress and all had declined. Somebody spied Rives sitting in a corner and nominated him.

ZENO J. RIVES.

"I won't have it!" yelled Rives. "Do they think they can hand me that kind of a gold brick?" He tried to get up and protest, but somebody held him down, and the crowd yelled, "We'll make you take it!" So he was nominated. Now he is studying up on oratory and says he will give a good account of himself.

General Horace Porter, who has served nearly eight years as ambassador to France and who expects to retire from that post in March, has been decorated with both the grand cross of the Legion of Honor and the medal of honor which the congress of the United States awards to heroes of the battlefield. General Porter had an unusually brilliant military career. He was educated at Harvard university and West Point Military academy and entered the Union army on the outbreak of the civil war. He was brevetted captain in 1863 for gallant services at the capture of Fort Pulaski, where he had command of the siege batteries. In the same year he was in the Tennessee campaign, being engaged in the advance on Tullahoma, the passage of the Elk river and the battle of Chickamauga. It was for gallantry in this battle, where he led regiments up to an important point and held it at a critical stage of the contest, that he was awarded the medal of honor. He won promotions rapidly and was a brigadier general at the close of the war, though then only twenty-eight years old. It was in 1863 that his connection with General Grant began. He was ever afterward on the most intimate terms with Grant. He served as assistant secretary of war when the general was head of the department and when the great military leader became president was his private secretary for a time. All through the remainder of Grant's life he was a close friend.

GENERAL PORTER.

About three years ago Ambassador Porter paid a visit to the White House and met a colored functionary named Jerry Smith, who had been at the executive mansion since Grant's time. No one greeted the diplomat more warmly than old Jerry, who said to a bystander:

"Does I know Gin'al Horace Po'tah? Waal, I reckon dey ain't no one knows de gin'al better 'an ole Jerry. Why, honey, he was de pres'dint's secretary fo' de longest time an' mos' de same as one of de fam'ly.

"Does I know Gin'al Po'tah? Waal, I reckon I ain't helped any man wif his ovahcoat as often as I done help Gin'al Po'tah. Such a boy to be a gin'al, too, but dey do say he was one of de bravest officers in de wah. An' I says, de pres'dint he sot a heap by him, an' de gin'al sot a heap by de pres'dint, an' de pres'dint knowed a brave man."

Fanny Crosby, The Blind Hymn Writer

SUNDAY, March 26, is to be observed in many Christian churches as "Fanny Crosby day." It was on March 24, 1820, in Southeast, Putnam county, N. Y., that the blind writer of sacred songs was born, and it has been thought fitting that those who love her hymns should pay her a tribute of affection on the Sunday nearest to her eighty-fifth birthday. Her home is in Bridgeport, Conn., and she is passing the closing years of a life that has been full of useful activity in the enjoyment of well earned honors.

At the age of six months little Frances Jane Crosby had as good eyesight as the average baby. The application of hot poultices to the eyes during an illness destroyed the optic nerves, and the little one was rendered sightless. At nineteen she was sent to the Institution For the Blind in New York city and there became so proficient in knowledge of the alphabet for the blind that she was made an instructor in the institution. For twelve years she taught English grammar and rhetoric, Greek, Roman and American history.

It was here she met a blind music teacher, Alexander Van Alstyne, whom she married. It was during this period of her career that she wrote poetry and secular songs, one of the most popular of the latter being "Rosalie, the Prairie Flower." Several volumes of her poetry were published. One of her poems was written in welcome to Henry Clay on the occasion of a visit of the great orator to New York.

She was forty-five years old when she wrote her first hymn. Not till that time did she discover her real vocation. Some of the most beautiful and popular of these compositions seemed to come to her as if by inspiration. One of her best known hymns, "Safe In the Arms of Jesus," was composed in about twenty minutes while W. H. Doane, who had written music for many of her hymns, was waiting to take a train. He sat down to the piano and played the music for which he wished her to compose some words. The song writer was deeply affected by the pathos and sweetness of the air and before the train arrived had thought out the lines which have since been sung by millions of people and have drawn tears from thousands of eyes.

Her rapidity of thought in composition is partly the result of training. She relates that once while a pupil at the Institution For the Blind she was required to produce some lines of blank verse and had put it off out of sheer laziness. Finally her teacher said to her: "Now, Fanny, it is time for business. No blank verse, no dinner." She had the poem ready before the dinner bell rang. That sort of practice enabled her to concentrate her mind on a theme and partly accounts for the swiftness of her thought when she composed the immortal lines for Mr. Doane.

The blind poet has a strong feeling for rhythm and a keen enjoyment of music and in her time has been herself a skilled performer on the guitar and piano. In the case of some of her songs and hymns she composed both words and music. She used to have a sweet soprano voice, and her sense of harmony was so strong that anything like a discord jarred on her ear and would even awaken her from sleep. A gentleman who knew this once used it to his advantage. On calling at the hotel where she was staying he was told by attendants that she was sleeping. They were reluctant to disturb her, whereupon the caller, whose business was pressing, strolled down the corridor where her room was located and began singing a hymn out of tune. The first false note awakened her.

Fanny Crosby's judgments of those about her are accurate. She comes to her conclusions through the sound of the voice. "That is a kind man; I like his voice," or "I don't want to know that person," she will say. She was seated next to a stranger in a hotel at dinner. Afterward a friend who knew his character asked her what she thought of him. "He is a deep, vile, bad man," she quickly replied. It was true. Conversing with a man who had spoken scornfully of a good impulse, she exclaimed, "Get me a hammer and let me raise a bump of reverence on this man's head!"

In some of the churches the hymns which she wrote will be sung on "Fanny Crosby day," and it is proposed to make her the recipient of a gift, thus honoring the poet while she is alive instead of waiting until she is dead.

FELTER'S VACATION.

The Story of a Visit to Germany With High Honors.

Once upon a time the senate restaurant at Washington was managed by a German-American named Felter, who was a renowned caterer to senatorial appetites and of course was popular.

In one of the nine months' congressional vacations Felter concluded to visit his old home in Germany, so he applied to Jim Christy, deputy sergeant at arms, for ocean transportation, which in due time was produced, and Felter started in high glee. He did not know how Christy procured the passes, nor did he care.

When he embarked the captain of the German line received him cordially, but with great dignity assigned him to one of the best staterooms and adorned his cabin with flowers. He had the post of honor at table and was treated as a hero or as a great personage might be treated.

Felter the cook could not understand, but he took all that was offered and made the best of the situation. When the vessel finally reached her destination and the passengers were landed the captain of the ship introduced Felter to the mayor, who awaited his coming and insisted that he make his home in the mayor's residence during his visit. His astonishment increased, but he accepted all of these attendons without asking any questions.

The following day he was banqueted as the guest of the city and was called upon for a speech. To the best of his ability he complied and explained the complex workings of the great republic of which he was a naturalized part, and every utterance was applauded. But Felter was unhappy, anxious to get away and find some old friends who might explain the reason for all this adulation. When the banquet was over an old schoolmate managed to get hold of his hand and begged him to go to his house for the night. This Felter gladly did, although the mayor gave reluctant permission, indicating that it was the next thing to discourteous for Felter to abandon the mayor's home while he was the guest of the city.

As soon as they were alone the friend inquired in German, "Felter, what sort of a game is this you have come over here to play on the folks of the fatherland?"

"I don't understand the game myself, and I wish that you could explain it to me. I am the keeper of the restaurant of the senate and am earning a good living at it—in fact, saving money. But that is no position of high honor, and I don't know what these people are doing all this entertaining for. It is away beyond me."

"Why, the steamship people issued your pass for Senator Felter and announced the coming of the senator on their line, and that's the reason you are thus received—in honor of your alleged rank and station."

"Let's look at the passes," said Felter. And there, sure enough, although he had not noticed it before, Jim Christy had secured passes for "Senator Felter," because in no other way could he have secured them.

Felter left the town early the next day and never re-entered it until he had concluded his visit to relatives, and then he came back just in time to catch the returning steamer before she left her dock. When he returned to Washington the things that he said to Jim Christy were too numerous and too strenuous for publication.—St. Louis Republic.

Peach Culture Taking a Back Seat.

Ohio horticulturists are pessimistic on peach culture, discouraged by "severe winters, glutted markets, poor shipping facilities and scarcity of labor." But if you do plant, four varieties are enough for a commercial orchard. The buyer wants a whole car load of one variety.

A Practical Golden Rule.

Everybody feels the justice of the Golden Rule. "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you." Would men have women rob them of their ballot? No. Then let not men rob women of their ballot. That is the Golden Rule put into practical form.—Rev. Dr. David Gregg.

I think women are bound to seek the suffrage as a very great means of doing good.—Frances Power Cobbe.

DISEASED KIDNEYS MADE WELL AGAIN.

Mr. Tompkins Troubled for Years, but Cal-cura Solvent Cured Him.

From one of the pleasant villages in the Catskill Mountains comes a letter from Nathaniel Tompkins, Windham Centre, N. Y. He says: "To-day you can ask what has made me feel ten years younger and I will tell you. It was the new medicine, Cal-cura Solvent, discovered by the well-known Dr. David Kennedy. For years I was troubled with my kidneys, but I am all right now."

Dr. Kennedy said he regarded his new medicine as the culminating achievement of his life, and he was right, for Cal-cura Solvent cures where all else fails. It enriches the blood, aids digestion, regulates the bowels and sets the liver at work. It is mild, but thorough. Its effects are lasting. All druggists, $1.00.

Why Coughing Weakens You.

A patient German scientist of a statistical turn of mind calculates that the amount of energy expended by a person who coughs once every quarter of an hour for ten hours is equivalent to 250 units of heat, or the nourishment yielded by three eggs or two glasses of milk. Coughing is thus seen to be an expensive luxury. The reason for the waste in force entailed by it, or one reason at least, lies in the fact that, while in normal respiration the air is expelled from the chest at the rate of four feet a second, in violent coughing it may attain a velocity of 300 feet.

A Chicago Alderman Owes His Election to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for affections of the throat and lungs," says Hon. John Shenick, 220 South Peoria street, Chicago, "Two years ago during a political campaign, I caught cold after being overheated, which irritated my throat and I was finally compelled to stop, as I could not speak aloud. In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses that afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largely subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won this seat in Council." This remedy is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Flimsy Objections.

I have never seen an argument against woman suffrage that was not flimsy. Men are much disposed to exaggerate the difficulties of voting intelligently when they talk of women voting. By the time a public question is ready for the popular vote it has become a very simple question that requires little more than honesty and common sense to vote upon it. If our mothers are not fit to vote they ought to stop bearing sons.—George W. Cable.

A Laconic Correspondence.

It is said that the celebrated German theologian, Schleiermacher, was rather inclined to save than to spend money. He was at one time quite ill and sent for a renowned physician, Dr. Grafe, who was court physician at the time and whose son became the great oculist. Schleiermacher recovered, and when fully restored to health he sent a polite note to Dr. Grafe, expressing his gratitude and inclosing 4 louis d'or, begging the physician to accept this small sum as a token of his appreciation of the services which had been rendered him.

The following day he received his gold pieces again, accompanied by the following laconic note from the great physician: "The poor I cure for nothing. The well to do pay me according to the regular 'medicine tax.' The rich reward me lavishly, according as it suits their pleasure!"

Thereupon the clergyman sat down and sent Dr. Grafe this still more laconic answer: "The 4 louis d'or are received back with gratitude. The poor Schleiermacher!"

Gastric and Nervous Vertigo.

The most common forms of vertigo are the gastric and the nervous. Gastric vertigo is sometimes induced by a very slight disorder of the stomach. The patient may feel a sudden swimming at the head; objects may seem to revolve; he totters and perhaps falls. There may be nausea, faintness, headache, visual hallucinations and buzzing in the ears, but there is no deafness nor any danger of a loss of consciousness. Gastric vertigo is cured by treatment directed to the cause.

Nervous vertigo may come from nervous exhaustion resulting from various causes—intellectual strain or an immoderate use of tobacco, alcohol or tea. The symptoms are much the same as in gastric vertigo. They are felt strongly in an elevated position—by the preacher in the pulpit or the speaker on the platform. As in gastric vertigo, the treatment must be directed to the cause. But patients need not fear an attack of paralysis or of apoplexy.

Kodol is a thorough digestant and guaranteed cure for Indigestion, Dyspepsia, gas on the stomach, Sour Risings, Bad Breath and all stomach troubles. N. Watkins, Lesbus, Ky., says: "I can testify to the efficacy of Kodol in the cure of Stomach Trouble. I was afflicted with Stomach Trouble for fifteen years and have taken six bottles of your Kodol Dyspepsia Cure, which entirely cured me. The six bottles were worth $1,000 to me." Kodol Dyspepsia Cure will digest any quantity of all the wholesome food you want to eat while your stomach takes a rest—recuperates and grows strong. Strange Mountain Sickness.

If mountain sickness should come upon you your bitterest enemy will lead your horse for you. The symptoms are those of habitual drunkenness. All the limbs shiver, and in the bloodless face the eyes have that extraordinary look of insanity which is, I think, caused by an inability to focus them. The speech comes with difficulty, and in one case that I saw the mental coherence was as obviously at fault as the physical. — Landor's "Lhassa."

Bells and Bees.

It is a foolish notion to suppose that the ringing of bells or "tanging" of tin pans will cause a swarm of bees to settle. The real origin of this custom dated back to the reign of Alfred the Great, who, in order to prevent disputes regarding the ownership of a swarm, ordered that the owner should always ring a bell when his bees swarmed, and ever since then the good farmer's wife has been rushing out with ringing bells whenever the bees swarmed, and the fact that they settled verified, in her own mind, the belief that the bell did it.

Rid yourself of nervous debility with this remedy and you are not likely to take cold. Don't give up, no matter how long you have been feeble, despondent and wretched. Not infrequently it is the maiden herself who imposes the test.

Something Just as Good.

Every Two Minutes

Physicians tell us that all the blood in a healthy human body passes through the heart once in every two minutes. If this action becomes irregular the whole body suffers. Poor health follows poor blood; Scott's Emulsion makes the blood pure. One reason why is such a great aid is because it passes so quickly into the blood. It is partly digested before it enters the stomach; a double advantage in this. Less work for the stomach; quicker and more direct benefits. To get the greatest amount of good with the least possible effort is the desire of everyone in poor health. Scott's Emulsion does just that. A change for the better takes place even before you expect it.

Have the sash fit snug on the frame. It is of no avail to have a well made bed and frame and then to leave cracks through which the warm air can get out and the cold air can get in.

Nothing but glass will be used north of Virginia by the person who is growing valuable plants at this season of the year.

The common hotbed sash measures about six feet four inches, and the width of the bed in the "clear" is about five feet ten inches. This allows for a fall of about six to eight inches from side to side. Double width beds are not satisfactory, except for finishing plants in cold frames.

Filling the Bed.

When manure is used as a source of heat put a layer of long manure or litter two or three inches thick over the bottom of the pit and over this a layer of fresh horse stable manure a foot thick. Some of our northern folks may want to make it eighteen inches thick. This manure should be well shaken up and placed evenly over the bed without packing it down with the fork. The prudent man has had it in a pile by the side of the bed long enough to get into a slight heat.

If the bed is a long one, stop when you have gone ten or twelve feet, take a board just long enough to reach across the bed, put it on the layer you have just put in, walk across and back on the board, turn over and continue this proceeding until you have gently pressed down the manure and made the surface smooth and level.

Now put on four or five inches of rich loamy soil and level it with a rake. Put sash on as far as you have gone and proceed to put in more heating material.

Seed Sowing.

If in season for sowing seed and the weather conditions were favorable, we would not wait for the soil to get warm, but would sow seed as soon as the bed was complete.

To retain internal heat and keep the cold out it is best to cover with mats or loose hay until the seed germinates. After this the sun must be admitted during the day and the covering be returned soon after 3 p. m. while plants are young and the weather cold.—Farm Journal.

A Satisfactory Market Finish.

Economical production of beef involves the securing of a satisfactory market finish without overloading the animal with fat. While an overripe condition contributes largely to higher averages of dressed beef and higher percentages of fat, it is detrimental to the retail butcher, the consumer and the producer; to the retail butcher because it entails too much waste of fat in cutting, to the consumer because he is forced to accept more fat at the market than can be agreeably consumed along with the lean beef accompanying the cut, and lastly and most important of all from the feeders' standpoint this unnecessary and superfluous fatness of the overripe bullock is the best possible evidence that the last gains have been very expensive.—H. W. Mumford, Illinois.

POPULAR GARDENING

Informal flower borders filled for the greater part with perennials which come up of themselves each spring and are hardy and reliable are again the fashion. Wild flowers are very effective in these borders.

An All Round Handsome Flower.

For a handsome all the year round border nothing surpasses the peony. It is hardy, has almost no insect troubles or disease and thrives without care. It affords a magnificent sight while the flowers are out and the blooming season is long. The foliage, too, is pleasing from the time it puts forth in spring till severe cold weather cuts it down.

Be Generous With Plant Food.

Do not maintain a "half starved" garden. Give the ground a good filling of commercial fertilizer or thoroughly rotted manure, and get the soil into the very finest of mechanical condition before sowing or planting. There are only a few things for which ground can be too rich or too finely fitted. Rich soil and good tilth is half the undertaking.

The Latest Wrinkle With Sweet Peas

Soil inoculation with the government's "yeast cakes" is the latest wrinkle for sweet peas and is worth trying. A New Jersey florist has taken two prizes from the State Horticultural society for sweet peas grown in that way. He says he had a larger crop, blooms that were finer and of more lasting quality than any grower in his region from the same amount of ground, and he credits it entirely to soil inoculation.

Have an Asparagus Bed.

A whole lot of fine eating is to be had out of a well established asparagus bed. It is one of the most satisfactory and least troublesome things in the home garden. If you love yourself and family, plant one this spring. Better get good roots from a trustworthy plantsman.

Half the Quality Is In the Soil.

Crisp, tender, melting quality in radishes and lettuce requires rich, finely fitted soil. One does not get something from nothing with these table dainties.

Tickle the Cabbage With the Hoe.

No plant takes more kindly to hoeing or cultivating than the cabbage. In the home garden on a small scale it pays to hoe every few mornings while the dew is on. The cabbage will respond generously to this little extra attention.

A Good Old Plum.

The old fashioned Damson plum is still a favorite. Better have a few trees in the home garden.

It has supplanted discomfort with ease—it has banished the impossible and exaggerated figure produced by the old corset idea. It removes the strain of lacing from the sensitive parts of the body and throws all pressure upon the hips and the strong back muscles, supporting the stomach within the corset and not forcing it below the garment. The Erect Form is made in more models than ever before. There are forty distinct styles of this popular make, each meant for a distinct type of woman. Dealers in all sized towns and cities the land over, sell the Erect Form. Prices range upward from $1.

The Cicada Fable.

Several species of insects have apparatus for producing sounds similar to that of the grasshopper or modifications of it. Of a different type is that with which the cicadas are endowed. Only the males of this family are singers, for which the Greek poets called them happy because their females were dumb. With the ancients a cicada sitting on a harp was the symbol of music. A pretty fable tells of the contest between two cithara players, in which the curious event happened that when one of the contestants broke a string a singing cicada sprang on his harp and helped him out so that he gained the prize.

Spoiled His Appetite.

Baron Graham once asked an epicure how many oysters he should eat in order to create a good appetite for dinner and was told to eat away until he became hungry. The baron, who never saw a joke, ate ten dozen and then plaintively remarked, "'Pon my word, I don't think I am as hungry as when I began."

If it is a bilious attack take Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and a quick cure is certain. For sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

John, the 16-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony C. Culkin, died at the home of his parents in West Fourth street on Wednesday from rheumatism of the heart. He had been ill for two years with rheumatism but hope for his ultimate recovery was entertained up to a short time before he passed away. The funeral services were held from the Church of the Immaculate Conception on Saturday morning, the Rev. P. J. Kearney officiating, and interment will be made in St. Mary's. Beside the parents, the deceased is survived by seven sisters, Mrs. Rebecca McDonald and the Misses Margaret, Helen, Elizabeth, Alice, Jennie and Anna B. Culkin, and three brothers, the Messrs. Martin, David and Frank Culkin, all of this city.

The grim messenger has invaded another home in our city and claimed as his own a gentle wife and tender mother, leaving sadness and loneliness incomparable to the stricken little family group. The announcement early Wednesday morning that Helena Race, aged 62, wife of Mr. Newell H. Gilbert, had passed away, caused profound grief to a large circle of acquaintances by whom she was greatly beloved, and deepest sympathy was expressed for the bereaved husband and two daughters, Myrtle G., and Lena M., who survive. The deceased was born in Seneca Falls, but had resided in Fulton nearly ever since she was united in marriage with Mr. Gilbert in 1869. She was devoted to music and for several years was leading soprano in prominent churches in Seneca Falls and Lockport. After she became a resident of this city her home was a center for devotees to music, and even after years of failing health and suffering had made impossible her active participation in musical affairs, her interest never failed and her home was always open and her greeting cordial to the friends who loved to accept her hospitality. Mrs. Gilbert was a believer in humanity and her voice was ever raised in defense of those whom less charitable ones attacked, and she had traits to commend in every one. She best loved her home and family; but her sympathies were extended toward the sufferers in our midst. The funeral was held from the late home on Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, the Rev. A. H. Grant of Zion Episcopal church, of which church the deceased was a communicant, and the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle of the Presbyterian church, officiating.

The home was filled with friends to whom the going away of this wife and mother brought a sense of personal loss. The magnificent floral tributes with which the casket was surrounded were mute tributes of love and sympathy for the departed and those left with sorrow.

Those present from out-of-town were Dr. and Mrs. F. G. Barnes, Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. Louise Barnes, Syracuse; Miss Julia Shepard, Oneida; Mrs. Whiting Da Lee, Rochester; Mrs. Milton Race, Rochester; Mr. Stuart Gray and Miss Zoe Gray, Greigsville; Mrs. B. G. Clapp, Bernards Bay, and Mr. H. A. Dygert, Phoenix.

The bearers were the Messrs. C. H. David, G. W. Morton, C. M. Allen, H. P. Allen, J. A. Foster and G. G. Chauncey. Interment was made in Mt. Adnah.

"SQUARE DEAL" CAMPAIGN

Justice Wright Admits That While His Son Was Pursuing His Studies in Syracuse University and Columbia Law School He Was Receiving $1,800 a Year From the State as His Private Secretary.

Justice Maurice L. Wright, who is a candidate for renomination to the Supreme Court bench, was interviewed last week by a Syracuse Herald correspondent in regard to the charges made that during the time his son, Avery S. Wright, was a student in Syracuse University and later in Columbia College, New York, he was on the payroll as his father's confidential clerk at a salary of $1,800 a year. The story has gained much headway and is being commonly discussed all over this judicial district.

Several years ago the Legislature passed a law which gave a confidential clerk, at a salary not to exceed $1,800 a year to each justice of the Supreme Court in this State. The object was to relieve the justices of as much office work as possible and allow them to devote their time to the work of the courts.

When the law first went into effect Justice Wright appointed H. R. Carrier, a lawyer, and at that time county court stenographer. When Mr. Carrier was made stenographer for the Supreme Court he resigned as confidential clerk to Justice Wright, and Avery S. Wright was appointed to fill the vacancy. Since his appointment Avery Wright has attended Syracuse University, Columbia College, and put in three years' study at law, and a few months ago was admitted to practice.

The stories, as circulated, were that Avery S. Wright was drawing the salary of $1,800 a year while attending college and was not doing any work in compensation for it. Justice Wright, in his interview in regard to these stories, said:

"I have heard that those opposing my nomination would spread the story that I had employed my son as confidential clerk while he was at the Syracuse University and later while he was at the Columbia law school in New York.

"The law gives the justices a confidential clerk, so that their time may be as free as possible for attending to the work devolving upon them. Before going to college my son studied law for a year and a half. When at Syracuse University he came to this city and assisted me at my special terms on Saturdays, the only time that I wanted him. While in Syracuse and also at the Columbia law school, he was at work looking up points of law that I wanted examined, and he did his work as well or even better there than he could have done here, because of larger and better libraries to work from and make his legal researches. When I needed my son's services here in my office he was here.

"He was too competent a man for the mechanical work of the office, and I hired a stenographer for the letter writing and copying of opinions on the typewriter at my own expense. I have stayed at my office during the vacation months of July, August and September, and with the assistance of my son we have kept the work up. He is a most competent clerk and has done splendid work for me. He is my confidential clerk and no one has any claim on his services but myself."

We give space to the foregoing interview so that our readers may become intelligently informed regarding the matter, and because of the stories which have been circulated. Justice Wright not only emphasizes the fact but condones the offence, if it be so considered. It is for the electors and taxpayers to decide whether a position carrying with it a salary of $1,800 per annum and one of trust and responsibility, could have been filled by a law student—at least while he was attending to his school duties—and a fair return given the State for salary received.

It may not be enough for the taxpayers to learn that the service was satisfactorily rendered by son to father. It is a question of principle and goes beyond that.

In this connection it might be pertinent to refer to some of the charges preferred against Justice Warren B. Hooker by the State Bar Association:

The Bristow report charges that employment was given to Maurice Hooker, a nephew of Justice Hooker, as a laborer in the post office in Fredonia, at a salary of $400 per annum, and although he did no work in the office, drew pay from Jan. 1, 1902, until June 30, 1903, amounting to $600. He employed a substitute for a part of the time at an expense of $150.

On Oct. 11, 1898, the postmaster at Fredonia was directed to appoint Frank P. Ball as laborer, at a salary of $600 a year. Ball was carried on the rolls from Oct. 12, 1898, to Dec. 31, 1902, and paid $2,532.07, for which he rendered no service whatever, being engaged most of the time in business at Dunkirk.

The Dunkirk case was the appointment of John A. Link as a laborer at $600 per annum. He was placed on the rolls May 1, 1898, and drew pay until June 30, 1903. He received in all $3,100.55, less $171 paid for a substitute, for which he rendered no service.

Justice Hooker is accused of having been implicated in the foregoing transactions.

Excellent Progress Made Under Direction of Prof. Grove L. Marsh of Syracuse—Recital Promised About May 1—Large Orchestra Organized Under Management of T. H. Webb—Good Program Promised.

The organization of the Choral society of this city has been productive of splendid results thus far. It is an opportunity seldom offered to obtain musical training and experience under so capable an instructor as Prof. Grove L. Marsh of Syracuse. Many are taking advantage of the opportunity and a hope is already expressed that the organization may become permanent.

The Choral Society was organized last Fall with about seventy five charter members. Several business meetings were held in the churches which resulted in the perfection of the society, the adoption of a constitution and bylaws and the election of the following officers:

President, Rev. A. H. Grant.
Vice-president, Mrs. L. Fowler Joy.
Secretary and treasurer, Mr. Theo. H. Webb.

Executive Committee—Rev. W. L. Sawtelle, chairman; Miss Georgetta Foster, Mr. W. J. Furness.

Rehearsals were begun Jan. 18, under the direction of Prof. Grove L. Marsh and have been conducted with energy and enthusiasm on each Wednesday evening since that time in Tucker's Hall, beginning at 7:30 o'clock. These will be continued until about May 1, when it is expected a public recital will be given either in the opera house or one of the churches.

The music which is being rehearsed at present is Gounid's "Gallia," Rosini's "Inflammatus," Mendelssohn's "Judge Me, O God" (43d Psalm) and the "Song of the Vikings."

A large orchestra of capable musicians has also been organized under the management of Mr. T. H. Webb, which will furnish accompaniment to the chorus, all of which will be under the immediate direction of Prof. Marsh. The orchestra is composed of the following:

Violins—Miss Charlotte David, Miss Louise Van Wagenen, Messrs. A. F. Buell, George W. Wilson, Guy Taylor, L. W. Ford and Claude E. Gulle.
Viola—Mr. William Parker.
'Cello—Mr. Thomas Earnshaw.
Basses—Messrs. Edward Pooler and L. A. Richardson.
Flute—Mr. Frank Barnes.
Clarionet — Messrs. Henry Bogue and Ray Lamphere.
Cornet—Messrs. Edward Croake and Neil Rogers.
French Horn—Mr. T. H. Webb.
Trombone—Mr. H. A. MacFarland.
Saxophone—Mr. W. J. Furness.
Drums, etc.—Mr. W. Ellis.

The foregoing is a most formidable organization and the rehearsals, with the chorus, which began last Wednesday evening, have afforded infinite satisfaction to the director who was pleased with the efficiency manifested.

In the forthcoming recital it is expected that an excellent program will be rendered. In addition to the parts of the cantata mentioned, a sextette, consisting of Mrs. A. H. Grant, Mrs. F. W. Stearns, Messrs. N. H. Gilbert, B. W. Bennett, H. A. MacFarland and C. M. Allen, will render the sextette from "Lucia," by Donizetti. There will also be quartettes and solos added to the program, as well as one or two orchestral selections.

The vocal soloists of the society at present are Mrs. Thomas Hunter and Miss Franc LaLonde, who will take prominent parts in "Gallia" and "Inflammatus."

When the recital program is more fully complete it will be published.

The season will close with the foregoing recital, but the society will resume active operations about Oct. 1, when it is hoped the membership will be largely augmented, as the dues for the season are only $1, and the advantages to be gained through instruction and experience to those who have ability as musicians and are desirous of developing their talent, cannot be overestimated.

REV. VINCENT RESIGNS

Accepted with Reluctance by His Church and Congregation in This City—An Enlarged Field of Usefulness—Testimonials of Brother Ministers.

The decision of the Rev. James Vincent, D. D., pastor of the Universalist Church of this city, to accept the pastorate of a church in Girard, Pa., has caused many expressions of regret among the representative citizens of Fulton, who appreciate the services rendered by Mr. Vincent during a sojourn in this city of several years—as a pastor and public-spirited citizen.

The Universalist Church in Fulton has been strengthed and benefited in every way through Mr. Vincent's pastorate and it is not surprising that the members of his congregation have very reluctantly consented to accept his resignation

Mr. Vincent's new charge is a flourishing church and congregation, with future possibilities, promising an enlarged field of usefulness. He will assume his duties April 2. The industry and intelligent effort which is characteristic of Mr. Vincent and his estimable wife, cannot fail to bring a large measure of success, which is confidently expected and hoped for by his numerous friends in this city.

The following testimonials are abundant evidence of the cordial relationship which has existed between Mr. Vincent and his brother ministers in Fulton:

EDITOR TIMES: I am surprised to learn that Dr. Vincent is to leave us. He was a part of the life of this city long before I came here to reside. As I came to know the various ministries of good in our city—patriotic, philanthropic, social, educational and religious—I found him in every one of them, active and earnest. These will realize his departure without an announcement of the fact.

My relation with him, as pastor with pastor, has been very cordial. Though differing widely and fundamentally upon doctrines which I regard as vital to the gospel of Jesus Christ, we have found ample common ground upon which to labor, shoulder to shoulder, and in good fellowship. More than once our theological wires have crossed. Then the fire would flash. But never once has spirit crossed spirit. His genial good nature would never give way.

I hope he and his estimable family may be greatly prospered in their new field of labor.

S. D. ROBINSON,
Pastor of State Street M. E. Church.

EDITOR TIMES: It is a pleasure for me to speak through your columns the words of my personal appreciation of Dr. Vincent. As a fellow minister he has been congenial and fraternal; theological differences have been subordinated to the large ideas of Christian service. In Fulton, Dr. Vincent will be remembered as a man who made the generous advances of friendship, and who was ever ready to do his part in matters of public interest. We wish him the best things in his new home and work.

WILLIAM L. SAWTELLE,
Pastor of Presbyterian Church.

EDITOR TIMES: I regret the intention of Dr. Vincent to leave our city. He has been here longer than any Protestant pastor and is well known by all classes. He is a very pleasant man, genial, kind hearted and public spirited, and will leave behind him a good many friends. My relations with him have always been most cordial and brotherly and I shall miss him in a good many ways. I wish him and his estimable family all happiness and prosperity.

JOHN RICHARDS,
Pastor of First M. E. Church.

EDITOR TIMES: The decision of Dr. Vincent to accept a call to another city is a decided loss to Fulton. I have enjoyed his fellowship and regret his departure. The moral and intellectual vitality of our city has been strengthened and quickened by the force of Dr. Vincent's strong personality.

NELSON REYNOLDS,
Pastor of First Baptist Church.

EDITOR TIMES: I have had the pleasure of Dr. Vincent's acquaintance for several years and in my ministerial relations and other associations with him I have found him to be uniformly a kind, courteous Christian gentleman and brother.

C. J. TAFT,
Pastor Volney Congregational Church.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

An Unusually Interesting and Instructive Program Presented.

Owing to the pressure of other matters last Monday evening, the Rev. John Richards and Mr. Earl S. Brown were unable to assume the leadership of the Current Events Club, which met at the home of Mr. A. Bristol, the Rev. C. J. Taft and H. J. Wilson, Esq., became substitutes, and an excellent program was presented.

The meeting was called to order by President Redhead, and Mr. Taft introduced Mr. Wilson, who spoke on Hungary's earnest desire for the use of the National language in that principality, which was negatived by the Emperor of Austria; the dedication of the Lutheran Cathedral in Germany and the Emperor's complimentary remarks regarding American ministers; the German Emperor's becoming the guest of the French Ambassador at dinner, showing a cordial relationship which had not before existed since the Franco-German war; celebration in England of the 100th birthday of Manuel Garcia, a renowned instructor in vocal music; Home Rule legislation for Ireland and John Redmond's statement in the House of Commons of the failure of the measure relating to the purchase of land; Venezuelan matters; the battle of Mukden, with casualties that were beyond human comparison and appreciation were some of the topics discussed.

Mr. Redhead gave a most interesting resume of the work of the Fifty-fifth Congress with its appropriation of at least $1,600,000,000, which surpassed in munificence any other Congress and which threatened a deficit, unless a tariff be placed on imports to meet necessary expenses of Government; the acquittal of Judge Swayne by the Senate. The President and Senate had been at cross-purposes regarding many matters of importance.

Miss Dugin discussed the question of Statehood in Oklahoma and the municipal ownership of water, electric roads and telephones in Port Arthur and Port William, Canada, which is proving successful and profitable to those cities.

Dr. Vincent called [illegible] President Roosevelt [illegible] determination to give every man a "square deal."

Mr. Louis W. Emerick explained the strike of the interborough employes in New York, giving the history of the trouble and the solution of the problem by the managers of the road.

The Rev. S. D Robinson dwelt upon the gubernatorial contest in Colorado and the contention between Kansas and the Standard Oil Company.

The Rev. Mr. Taft brought the interesting program to a close by explaining the new primary law in North Dakota and the position taken by the Governor of Indiana in his refusal to appoint men to office who were addicted to the use of intoxicants.

Before adjournment, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The members of the Current Events Club learn with regret of the decision of the Rev. James Vincent, D. D., an honored member, to sever his connection with his church in this city and to remove to Girard, Pa., to accept the vacant pastorate of a church in that place; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we sincerely regret his departure, and that of his estimable wife and family from our city, we hope that a large measure of success may attend Dr. Vincent's labors in his new field, conscious of the fact that while Fulton has lost an admirable and public-spirited citizen, Girard may well be proud of so valuable an acquisition.

The next meeting of the club will be held at the home of Mrs. E. R. Redhead, April 3. The leaders will be Mr. L. W. Emerick and the Rev. Nelson Reynolds.

NEW HOBOKEN TERMINAL.

Immense Passenger Depot to be erected by Lackawanna Railroad.

Work has already begun on the new terminal which the Lackawanna Railroad Company is erecting in Hoboken, N. J., and it is expected that the building will be completed and in operation within two years. The improvement comprises a vast ferry and railroad structure, there being six slips to accommodate the boats plying to Barclay, Christopher, and Twenty-third streets in New York City, while sixteen tracks will make a rapid train movement possible.

The building will be absolutely fireproof, a minimum of wood being used. Its construction will be of steel and concrete throughout, the walls on the exterior being covered with copper-finished verdigris.

The station will be attractive from an architectural point of view, and numerous new features are planned for the convenience of the road's patrons. The main waiting room will be one hundred feet square and fifty-four feet high, with enormous windows on all sides. From this will open the women's rooms, smoking rooms, lunch room, parcel and information rooms and numerous other dependencies. The restaurant will be on the second floor overlooking the water with a view up and down the river and will be of sufficient size to accommodate two hundred people. A wide balcony projects from the restaurant, for dining out of doors in Summer.

A wide concourse will give access to the second deck of the boats and this concourse alone will hold thirty thousand people. Passengers from boats to trains will not be compelled to pass through the main waiting room, but may proceed through a forty-foot concourse to a broad flight of steps leading to the tracks.

Owing to the fact that it is physically impossible to raise the level of the tracks to the height of the second floor, the tracks will remain on the grade level and the passengers will have the option of ascending to the second deck of the boats by an inclined plane of gentle slope or by using elevators and stairways.

On the ground floor of the ferry-house will be found a large waiting-room for the Hoboken ferry passengers and on the second floor numerous division offices of the company, a completely equipped emergency hospital, toilets, barber-shop and baths.

The exterior of the building will be six hundred feet long on the river side, the tower rising to a height of two hundred and twenty-five feet. This will be electrically illuminated at night and its lighted clock faces will be one of the noticeable sights of the harbor.

A separate building for the use of immigrants and Pullman supplies, just to the south of the terminal building, is nearly completed and will be occupied within a few months. The work of building is necessarily somewhat slow, as the structure must be erected in sections so as not to interfere with the heavy traffic the Lackawanna is now carrying. The Company hopes to have everything completed within twenty-six months after the commencement of the work. Kenneth M. Murchison is the architect.

Nicholas the Last.

Czar Nicholas, his court and the Russian autocracy are vividly pictured by Perceval Gibbon in "What ails Russia," in the April McClure's. Perceval Gibbon is a St. Peterburg correspondent, and has a first hand acquaintance with his subject, and the gift of trenchant, powerful pen. His strong narrative carries a shock to the American mind. It deals with a state of society that is almost inconceivable because it is so far outside of our experience. Nicholas, as Mr. Gibbon has seen him, is a pitiable, sorrow-stirring figure. "Little sacred, fooled," he calls him, "blind, ineffective, and hysterical," and as a correspondent this writer has had unusual opportunities of getting at the man beneath the official effigy. The truth of his estimate cannot be doubted. It is the composite of the opinions of unofficial St. Petersburg.

The grand dukes and the dead weight of rotting autocracy they represent are treated succinctly and with equal power.

"They are the blanket that smothers the struggling flame of civilization, these grand dukes, the tombstone that holds down the coffined soil of Russia." The story is portentous in its tone, so great and so cruel are the sufferings of the people. It gives an understanding of the horrors of the revenge that is perhaps even now being taken.

She's Your Mother Dear

THE DAIRYMAN

The inspection work of the department of agriculture at the various pork packing centers of the country reveals some rather disturbing features, says Hoard's Dairyman. It is shown that there has been a remarkable increase in the number of hogs that are found tuberculous in the last three years. Three years ago the number was 4,000. Last year the number had increased to 14,000. But what Hoard's Dairyman wishes to call especial attention to is the fact that 90 per cent of these tuberculous hogs are said to come from the dairy districts. How did they get this disease?

The answer is, By feeding on skim milk from tuberculous cows. Every hog found thus diseased is almost a dead loss to the packer.

Already, we understand, the packers are moving to force a very unfavorable discrimination against hogs coming from dairy districts. The hog is a very important adjunct to the dairy farmers, and it will hit them hard if their hogs are discriminated against. Here is another solid reason why dairy farmers should at once set to work to have their herds tested with tuberculin. If the farmers will test their cows and get rid of the diseased members of the herd they will have the satisfaction of knowing that they are not spreading the disease among their own cattle and hogs and that the milk is healthy and wholesome for both human beings and farm animals.

This is also another argument for the use of the farm separator. Where a man separates his own milk on the farm he is not feeding diseased milk from his neighbors' cows—neither is he poisoning the hogs or calves of his neighbors in case his own cows are diseased.

Looked at from any standpoint, it seems to us to be the highest wisdom for every dairyman to tuberculin test his herd at least once a year. With this disease it is also absolutely necessary to be certain of the soundness of every cow or young animal that comes into the herd or else the guardian work of years may be destroyed by one case of carelessness.

Wonderful Erosion.

A curious effect of the wear and tear to which the earth's crust is ever being subjected is exhibited in the singularly capped pinnacles existing on South river, in the Wasatch mountains, in Utah. There are hundreds of these slender pillars, ranging in height from 40 to 400 feet, most of them crowned by large caps of stones. They are not works of human art, as might be imagined, but are the memorial monuments of the hill from which they have been cut by the action of air and water. Those pinnacles alone remain of many square miles of solid rocks, which have been washed away to a depth of some 400 feet. The greater hardness of the surface has caused it to resist corrosion more than the underlying rock, thus leaving huge caps of stone perched high in air on the points of their columns. One double column, capped by a single stone, forms a natural bridge both unique and picturesque.

The First Friction Matches.

The first really practicable friction matches were made by an English apothecary named Walker in 1827. He coated splints of cardboard with sulphur and tipped them with a mixture of sulphate of antimony, chlorate of potash and gum. Each box, holding eighty-four matches and sold for a shilling, contained also a folded piece of glass paper, which was to be pressed together while the match was drawn through it. Three years later another ingenious person named Jones in London patented the idea of making a small roll of paper, soaked with chlorate of potash and sugar at one end, with a thin glass globule filled with strong sulphuric acid attached at the same point. When the sulphuric acid was liberated by pinching the globule it acted upon the chlorate of potash and sugar so as to produce fire.

"I think THE WORLD'S WORK [illegible]"—ANDREW CARNEGIE

EDISON'S TRIUMPH.

An Incident In the Great Inventor's Start In Life.

Dr. Norvin Green, for many years president of the Western Union Telegraph company, once said that but for the dullness of himself and his assistants Thomas A. Edison might never have obtained the confidence and support of the great corporation. Edison had been trying for months to induce the officials to take up some of his inventions until they began to regard him as a bore.

He went to the main office one day and was greeted by Dr. Norvin Green and the other officials with sneering smiles. Dr. Green said: "Mr. Edison, we are unable to get into communication, with Albany, and a large amount of important business is in peril. I suppose that since you know more about telegraphy than all of the rest of us combined you can locate the difficulty."

Whether Edison noticed the sneering tone or not, he quietly answered, "I can locate it inside of two or three hours, sir."

Dr. Green and the others laughed outright, one of them saying, "Edison, you have now fully demonstrated that you are a crank."

Edison never smiled or addressed a word to the speaker, but looked at Dr. Green and said: "If I locate this difficulty in two or three hours, will you take up my inventions and give them honest consideration?"

"Yes, I will," said Dr. Green, "and I will do it if you succeed in two days."

It was a very simple thing, and yet Edison was the only one who had the comprehensive mind to think of it instantly. He did not tell them for many years afterward how he accomplished the feat, but he did it inside of one hour.

Edison went to the main offices, where he was known as an expert operator, and called up Pittsburg. He asked for the best operator there, naming him, and then told the Pittsburg man to call up the best man at Albany and direct him to telegraph down the line toward New York as far as he could and report back to Edison as soon as possible. Inside of an hour Edison had this telegram:

"I can telegraph all right down to within two miles of Poughkeepsie, and there is trouble with the wire there."

Edison went back to the office of the president and gravely announced that if a train should be sent to Poughkeepsie with materials for the work they would find a break in the line just two miles on the other side of Poughkeepsie and could repair it that afternoon.

They begged him to tell how he had found it out, and he replied:

"By knowing more about telegraphing than all of you put together, as Dr. Green has said."

They located the break, repaired it, and Dr. Green took up Edison's inventions, and that was Edison's great start in life.—Youth's Companion.

DURING the last six years, an evangelist named J. E. Brown, 26 years old, has held meetings in twenty-three States and has been the means of bringing 14,000 persons into the church. He is now conducting services in Macon, Mo., which is said to be one of the most enthusiastic revival meetings ever held there.

RETURNING CONFEDERATE BATTLE FLAGS.

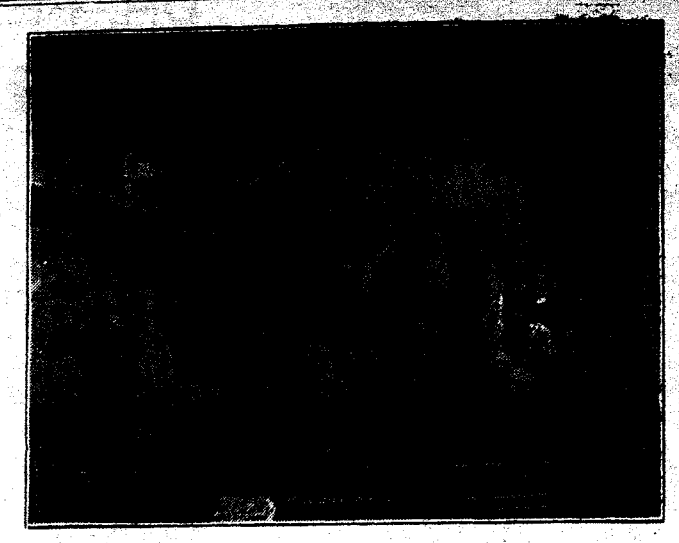
The surviving members of the Second Tennessee Cavalry have learned that the flag captured from them at Memphis during the Civil War is reposing in a glass case in the Illinois State House, the property of the State of Illinois. Robert Mann Wood, department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic of Illinois, in a recent letter to Governor Deneen, says:

"Replying to your letter concerning the request of Tennessee for the return of the Second Tennessee flag which was captured by an Illinois regiment, permit me to say that in this request I recognize no rebellious spirit or evidence of continued antagonism, but simply a desire to regain the flag as one would want a relic of their dead.

"Had a request came from the South five or ten years after the war the Grand Army of the Republic would have unanimously opposed it.

"While opposed in deadly array forty-five years ago, during the War of the Rebellion, we became comrades in arms in the Spanish-American war, to which thousands more than requested of the Southern people volunteered.

"I trust the General Assembly will pass a joint resolution authorizing the return of the flags to their respective States from whose troops we captured them, being assured they will never be floated to the breeze in rebellion against the United States."



The spirit which prompted the foregoing is an admirable one and worthy of emulation throughout our country.

Body of John Burns Recovered

On Sunday, as William Wesley was walking just north of this city at a point known as Nelson's pond, he discovered the body of John Burns, who disappeared mysteriously on the night of Jan. 5, frozen in the ice. Mr. Wesley notified Coroner Cusack, who ordered the remains removed to E. P. Cole's undertaking rooms, where an investigation was held. It is thought that the deceased fell from the heel path of the Oswego Canal upon the night of his disappearance and was soon so benumbed by the cold water that he was unable to save himself, as he left Battle Island about midnight and was not seen again. The funeral services were held from the undertaking parlors on Monday morning and interment was made in St. Mary's. The deceased, who was 46 years of age, was an expert mechanic. He is survived by two brothers, Messrs. Bernard of this city and Christopher; two sisters, Mrs. Thomas Galvin of the west side and Mrs. Julia Kevil of Chicago. A great deal of sympathy is felt for the relatives, who sincerely mourn the brother's untimely demise.

THE RICHARDSON, OSWEGO.

"Miss Bob White."

The comedy opera, "Miss Bob White," will be presented at the Richardson Theatre, Oswego, on Saturday evening March 25. Arrangements have been made with the O & W. Railroad to run a special train, which will leave Cayuga street depot about 7:15, returning after the performance. The sale of reserved seats will begin at Watson's drug store on Thursday at 2:30 p. m. Railroad tickets can also be procured at Watson's.

The Washington Post had the following to say regarding the performance in that city:

"Miss Bob White," Willard Spenser's comedy opera, proved a source of genuine entertainment to the first nighters at the Lafayette theatre last evening. A happy blending of lyrics and witty lines presented by a cast fully capable throughout, the production caught the fancy of the large audience and met with unqualified approval. The score is in Spenser's brightest vein. The plot is catchy and well sustained, but after all it is Spenser's musical talent that charms and the pretty compositions heard at last night's performance constituted the feature of the production.

Enjoyable Reception.

On Thursday afternoon the spacious home of Mrs. A. C. Livingston in First street was thrown open for a reception tendered about two hundred of Mrs. Livingston's friends, in celebration of her natal anniversary. The home was beautifully decorated with cut flowers and a cordial greeting was extended the guests by Mrs. Livingston, Miss Franc French and Mrs. Frank Platt of New York City. During the receiving hours, Kapp's orchestra from Syracuse discoursed entrancing music from an alcove hidden by palms and cut flowers. The color scheme in the dining room was red and green and it was skillfully carried out throughout the menu, Rousch of Syracuse catering. The square table in the dining room was covered with a priceless lace spread of exquisite design. Among the table decorations might be mentioned a huge birthday cake emblished with wax tapers denoting the mile stones in life's journey, passed by the gracious hostess. Among the out-of-town guests present were Mrs. Platt of New York City, Mrs. Baker and Mrs. Lamb of Syracuse; Mrs. Henry Post and sister, Mrs. Switz Conde and Miss Belle Tucker of Oswego; Mrs. Dean and Mrs. Betts of Phoenix.

Commissioners Selected to Regulate Flow of Water.

The owners of water power met last Thursday in the Volney Paper Company's offices and selected three commissioners whom the court would be asked to appoint for the purpose of regulating the flow of water on the east side of the river to the several mills, apportioning to each the amount they are entitled to. The commissioners are Messrs. E R. Redhead, Frank B. Dilts and Louis W. Emerick. The selection of the commissioners is not an unusual proceeding, and their formal appointment by the judicial authorities will undoubtedly follow.

K. of P. Ladies' Night.

One of the most successful ladies' nights ever given by Pathfinder Lodge, K. of P., occurred on Friday evening of last week. A committee composed of Messrs. Charles Hoff, John Cox, and Willis Morin were responsible for the success of the event, as they were given carte-blanche regarding arrangements. The rooms had been artistically decorated by Mr. Maurice Hiller and presented a very pleasing appearance. The guests were received by Messrs. O. P. Davis and R. L. McCully, and the hospitality of the lodge was generously extended by them. Dancing was the main feature of the evening's entertainment and music was furnished by Lamphere's orchestra of four pieces. A collation was served at midnight. At the mystic hour of 2 a. m. the Knights and their ladies departed for their homes, acknowledging the evening to have been most delightfully spent.

At a joint meeting of the Board of Health and Board of Education, held this morning in the City Hall, Health Officer Dr. D. E. Lake reported that there were nine (9) cases of scarlet fever in the city, all of a mild form but two (2). All are strictly quarantined and Dr. Lake is pleased with the intelligent manner in which the parents are co-operating with him in isolating the patients. There seems no reason to fear a general epidemic if only ordinary care is taken and all parents are requested to examine the throats of their children each morning and if there is any inflammation whatever, to keep the child at home and send for the family doctor or the health officer. If this is done systematically, there is no reason whatever to be alarmed.

By Wireless From the Footlights

"I WANT a pistol to kill a man, and I have the money right here. I am an actor, and I want to kill some one, but not in the piece. I want to kill him stone dead."

In this blunt fashion a dealer in firearms was approached by a prospective customer. He bent over the counter and saw a tiny but resolute figure before him. It was Master William Burton Janes, the four-year-old actor who plays the role of Little Tommy in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

WILLIAM BURTON JANES.

As soon as the astonished dealer could recover his breath he took another look at the bloodthirsty midget and then, entering into the spirit of the occasion, produced a toy pistol which exploded caps and proffered it to the diminutive exponent of tragedy in real life.

Master William looked at it contemptuously. "I want a sure enough gun that will make a hole in Mr. Hodge," he piped in petulant, childish tones that contrasted strangely with his dire threats. The embarrassment of the dealer was relieved at this moment by the arrival of Miss May McManus, who is the Asia of the house of Wiggs. Master Janes is in her charge while the company is on the road. The youngster is of a very jealous disposition. He is devoted to Miss McManus, and when Mr. Hodge addressed a few words to her while waiting in the wings for his cue young Janes determined to have his heart's blood. It is feared Little Tommy may have to be put under bonds to keep the peace.

Now and then the actor, author and poet E. H. Sothern admits visitors to his dressing room. He did so in Cincinnati, where he entertained a somewhat nervous and excitable gentleman during his moments "off stage."

In the midst of one of their arguments there entered the room a dignified and decorous colored man, who advanced to the center, saying in an earnest monotone:

"Have you no fear of God?" and mysteriously departed as he came.

Mr. Sothern's guest was naturally astounded, but he was too well bred to ask questions. Resuming his argument, he again grew heated in his remarks, and again the colored man quietly and mysteriously entered and declared:

E. H. SOTHERN.

"If you were the devil himself do you think you could make me like you?"

To the guest's surprise, the actor took the interruption as a matter of course, so Sothern's visitor in a dazed manner continued his argument, only to be interrupted again by the same colored intruder, this time with the remark:

"I know you now, and God knows I pity you."

Mr. Sothern's guest was now too surprised to talk. He sat in a collapsed condition until the same man had entered three separate times and in an expressionless voice had said:

"I am as changeless as the sun. I will carry my soul pure to heaven."

"You are the strange woman."

"You shall be as beautiful as I am and as happy."

This last remark was too much for the man's nerves. He was barely able to gasp: "Sothern, what the blazes does this mean? Is this a joke or an insane asylum? Who is this fellow?"

"That," said the actor—"that is simply my dresser, Lewis. His duty is to notify me of the progress of the play by lines. In that manner I know when my cue comes."

"Oh," said Mr. Sothern's guest, wiping great beads of perspiration from his face, "I was beginning to believe I had 'em."

William T. Hodge, who made a hit as Mr. Stubbins in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," was studying up for a production in Chicago two years ago, and, becoming thirsty along in the early hours of the morning, he called a boy and, as he tells the story, ordered "a bottle of milk." When the boy returned he bore the bottle in his hand, and, turning to the actor, said, "You must excuse me for not bringing this on a tray, but all our trays are in use tonight."

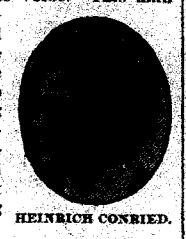
WILL T. HODGE.

"Is that so?" replied Hodge. "And how does that happen?"

"Well," said the boy, "Mrs. Pat Campbell is giving a dinner downstairs, and they have all the trays down there."

"So Mrs. Campbell is giving a dinner?" mused Hodge.

"Yes," said the boy, "and all the actors in town are down there."



"All?" said Hodge.

"Oh, yes," answered the boy, "all but the cheap skates."

Since Heinrich Conried, director of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, has come into prominence [illegible] impresario he has been granted considerable space in the newspapers.

It is told that at a dress rehearsal of "Parsifal" a book reviewer said of him:

"I know a rich stockbroker who thinks he can write verse. This man had Conried to dinner one night, and after dinner he was so inhospitable as to read aloud to his guest a long poem called 'Alcohol.' Conried listened silently, and he continued silent after the reading was done.

HEINRICH CONRIED.

"'Well?' said the stockbroker. 'Well? Pretty good, eh?'

"'Pretty good,' the other murmured in a cold voice.

"'I'd like to print this with my name signed to it,' the stockbroker went on, 'but the trouble is I don't want it known among my business friends that I am a poet.'

"'Is that any reason,' said Mr. Conried, 'why you should hesitate about signing the thing?'"

Emma Calve, who is winning golden opinions and golden coins in a European tour this season, doubtless remembers with a chill an experience she had in this country about a year ago, when she went to New Haven, Conn., to sing the role of Carmen. It happened that a large number of students were desirous of engagement as "supers" in the opera and only a few could be hired. There was quite a mob of the unsuccessful applicants, and their pranks became so boisterous that the stage manager became alarmed. He conceived the bright idea of repelling them with a fire hose. Forthwith he stationed the carpenter at the stage entrance and armed him with fifty feet of three inch cotton hose and an inch and a half nozzle. He told him to wait until he got a signal to turn the water on and then to play for all he was worth.

EMMA CALVE.

A few minutes later Mme. Calve's carriage swung up to the curb, and the students, recognizing her as she stepped forth, opened a lane for the singer and let out three cheers. The carpenter, who had an eye to a hole in the stage door, got rattled at this moment and turned on the water. Mme. Calve was bowing her acknowledgments for the reception of the students when a cold stream struck her and made her gasp. She put up her hands in protest, but the carpenter stood valiantly to his post.

Giving up in despair, the prima donna finally gathered up her skirts and with head down made a dash for the stage entrance. The carpenter at last saw his mistake. Mme. Calve rushed to her dressing room and half an hour later appeared on the stage as serene as if nothing had happened.

While Lawrence D'Orsay, who is now touring in "The Earl of Pawtucket," was playing in Denver recently he dropped into a local barber shop to be shaved. After the barber had completed his ministrations and D'Orsay had left the chair a traveling man, the next in turn, appropriated it and, turning to the man with the razor, said:

LAWRENCE D'ORSAY.

"Say, do you know who that was you just shaved?"

"No, sah," replied the barber; "I dunno."

"Well," replied the drummer, "that is Lawrence D'Orsay, the Earl of Pawtucket."

"Is dat so, sah? Well, well! I's offen see him on de stage, but dis is de fust time I ever had de pleasure of meeting him socially."

Miss Mary Shaw, who created the role of Amrah in "Ben-Hur" and who has been playing with her company at the Circle theater, New York, recently, is a great admirer of the works of the Norwegian dramatist Ibsen. Two seasons ago, when she was preparing to play the role of Mrs. Alving in Ibsen's "Ghosts," she called on her dressmaker to talk over the subject of costumes.

MARY SHAW.

"She asked me what the play was," Miss Shaw relates, "and I told her it was 'Ghosts.' Thereupon she informed me that she had some lovely white goods that she could make up for me."

Miss Shaw has an aversion to removing her hat at social gatherings, and at one time a hostess, a little provoked at her peculiarity, demanded a reason for it.

"Well, you see, it's my hair," said the actress promptly. "I have a head of hair that always looks like a rat's nest. If I smooth it down primly I feel uncomfortable and embarrassed. I shall never forget the first time I met Bernhardt and her remark about my hair.

"'Mademoiselle,' she said, 'I am glad to meet at last a woman whose hair looks worse than mine.'"

SLAVES OF SOCIETY.

Women Who Will Be Glad to Be Free When Freed by Others.

Mrs. Lyman Abbott, Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, Mrs. Abram Hewitt, Mrs. Elihu Root, Mrs. John G. Carlisle, Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder—just look at them! Ain't they the candied fruit of a generation characterized by "frenzied finance?" Why, they have not even got a name of their own! They each have a man's name with the word "Mistress" prefixed.

Well, these are some of the N. Y. S. A. O. E. S. W., which being interpreted reads, New York State Association Opposed to the Extension of Suffrage to Women. They have recently published their ninth annual antisuffrage report. They are tickled to death "over the way the Iowa legislature continues to treat the suffrage women of Iowa; they are filled with glee over the labor and political troubles in Colorado; they "point with pride" to the small number of women inclined to take advantage of partial suffrage in the state of New York.

What care these favored members of society for the low wages of women teachers, for the political and judicial corruption portrayed by Watson and Tarbell, for facts such as the election of criminals to positions of trust and honor in cities like Boston and New York? Nothing. They have no duties in the premises. They are being supported and do not want to be troubled with duties and responsibilities. The remarkable progress made by womankind owes nothing to them.

Before the war there were favorite slaves, women who were colored—somewhat light colored. Did they want to be free? Not at all. They were pets and pampered, and freedom had no charms for them. After the war these same favorites, having seen a new light, were glad to be free. Life was harder for them, and yet no one was willing to be a slave again. The slaves of society shrink from the responsibilities of freedom today and chuckle with each other over prospects of delay, but John Brown's soul goes marching on, and tomorrow they will be found rejoicing that they are free. They will have names of their own, souls that they can call their own, powers, privileges, rights, duties, personalities, all their own.

J. O. STEVENSON.

NO BALLOT BOX STUFFERS.

Women's Innocence In Colorado Admitted by All Political Parties.

I do not believe there is an editor or writer in the United States opposed to woman suffrage who has not pointed to the election frauds in Denver as proof that women should not be allowed to vote anywhere.

The fraudulent votes cast by women at the elections in Colorado in proportion to those cast by men were about one to five hundred; therefore no woman should be enfranchised.

Because Colorado women have not been able to make all men honest in their political duties therefore all women must remain disfranchised. This is the sum and substance of the arguments. Did any one ever listen to anything more idiotic?

Why not argue because the churches have not been able to drive all sin from the hearts of the people therefore we should drive the church from the country. One argument is just as logical as the other.

When we find both Governor Adams and ex-Governor Peabody, though engaged in a bitter conflict over these very frauds, asserting that women are in no way responsible for the Colorado election troubles, and W. H. Bryant, president of the Honest Election league of Denver, declaring that women have practically nothing to do with the fraudulent voting, we may be pretty sure of the truth of their statement.

We don't find the newspapers of Colorado printing such stuff. They know better, and they know that their readers know better.

If the election frauds in Colorado prove anything in regard to who should vote, they prove that all men should be disfranchised and all women enfranchised.

ELNORA MONROE BABCOCK.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE BENEFIT.

The Ballot an Excellent Thing For the Woman of the Working Class.

This cry of the antisuffragists that for one good woman that would go to the polls there would be nine bad women is dreadfully hackneyed.

Take my word for it, the bad women would not bother their heads about the polls, and the women of the working class, the ignorant and uneducated who worry the antis so much, would make excellent voters.

In this grade of society it is the woman who holds the purse strings, who finances the pittance earned by her husband, who really knows little (because he has so little time for learning) beyond his pick or hoe.

It is the woman who saves and plans, who educates the children and keeps the home together, and who, if she had the ballot, would study every phase of the political situation which could benefit the husband and the children. She would take more interest in vital questions than her wealthy sister because those questions would come home to her more closely.

I do not believe in woman suffrage. I believe in equal suffrage. Let the man and woman stand and fall together. I do not want to look up to any man. I want to stand equal to him and look into his eyes. What is sin in him is sin in me. What rights he has I should have also. If the ballot is not an inherent right, it should be an equal gift to man and woman.

Vice President Socrata.

DO NOT FAVOR POLYGAMY.

Ridiculous Charge Made Against Leading Woman Suffragists.

Opponents of equal rights for women are scattering through the press an accusation that the woman suffragists, and especially Miss Anthony and Mrs. May Wright Sewall, favor polygamy. Dean Swift said it was remarkable how few persons were skillful liars considering the large number that practice the art. In all his experience, he declared, he had not met with more than three good lies. This lie about Miss Anthony and Mrs. Sewall is a particularly clumsy one. Miss Anthony's pet idea, to which she has been devoted for a lifetime, is equal rights for women. Can any one seriously suppose she would favor allowing a man to have a dozen wives when a woman is only allowed to have one husband?

This whole outcry is raised because Miss Anthony said she had more respect for a Mormon who imagined that he had a religious sanction for his actions than she had for a nominal Christian who lived an immoral life and because Mrs. Sewall last summer expressed herself as opposed to expelling from the woman's council a society of Mormon women which had belonged to the council for years.

Mrs. Sewall defined her position in a letter published in the Woman's Journal of May 21, 1904. She said, "I believe in the monogamic as the only form of marriage compatible with an ideal home, serving the highest spiritual development." Mrs. Sewall added that she thought it was a good thing to have the organization of Mormon women join the council and be brought in contact with women holding the higher ideal of monogamic marriage, and she reminded her critics that Frances Willard also had favored letting the Mormon association belong.

Mrs. Sewall denied in toto that she had ever written to Senator Beveridge urging the seating of Senator Smoot.

In regard to whether Mr. Smoot should be seated there are all sorts of opinions among the suffragists. If he should be allowed to take his seat it will be by vote of a senate most of whose members are opposed to woman suffrage. Would that justify the suffragists in declaring that the antis as a class favor polygamy? The opponents of equal rights for women must be poorly off for legitimate arguments when they make so absurd a charge against Miss Anthony and Mrs. Sewall.

HOLDING BACK THE LIGHT.

Woman's Influence, Praised In the Home, Denied to the Government.

It is one of the glaring inconsistencies of the United States government that those to whom God has intrusted the highest ideals, the noblest and quickest perceptions of right and wrong, are deprived of the right to bring these influences to bear upon the nation's welfare. The government is supposed to represent the wishes of those governed, yet over one-half the American citizens are denied any way of making their sentiments known in regard to matters of the government. Men talk of woman's sphere and the uplifting and refining influence of the home, yet when it comes to letting these influences spread for the nation's good they are horrified and say it will lessen her womanliness to step outside of the gilded cage into which he has put her and which he calls "home."

Every hand should be free to do its best work. The hand of woman is held by the actual. People generally believe that the actual conditions are the only possible, not the ideal. This is not true. The ideal is just as possible as the actual, but it is hard for the hand of woman to break away from the grasp of the actual and take hold of the hand of the ideal. The dead, cold hand of antiquity also is a handicap to woman's progress.

It does not trouble me so much that there is the eternal injustice of women not being regarded equal to make laws which nevertheless they are judged by, nor does it trouble me so much that they are taxed without representation. But what does trouble me is the fact that there is such a crying need for them at the present time.

We need to let loose every noble, intellectual force, every lofty, moral influence, where the hand is strong to strike with full strength to nail the principle down for all time.

"My case is so remarkable that I want to tell you all about it. I suffered from bladder trouble for about 25 years, and had tried all the doctors about here, and also two specialists in New York, without getting any help. Last August I bought a bottle of Cal-cura Solvent, Dr. Kennedy's new medicine. I had not been able to work at my trade (boiler making) for some time, but after taking one bottle of Calcura Solvent, I began work and have been working ever since. Cal-cura Solvent has done more for me in a month than all the doctors did in 20 years, and I don't complain of the doctors."—Martin Fuller, Matteawan, N. Y. All druggists, $1.00.

Making Fire.

When it is considered how old the world's civilization is it seems surprising that man should have only so very recently learned how to make fire easily. The primitive flint and steel method is practically but of the last generation, and that does not appear so very far ahead of friction with wood. It is not astonishing, on the whole, that savages should commonly suppose that fire really exists in wood and stone since it is from these everyday materials that they secure a portion of Prometheus' precious theft from heaven.

A Chicago Alderman Owes His Election to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for affections of the throat and lungs," says Hon. John Shenick, 220 South Peoria street, Chicago, "Two years ago during a political campaign, I caught cold after being overheated, which irritated my throat and I was finally compelled to stop, as I could not speak aloud. In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses that afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largely subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won this seat in Council." This remedy is for sale by H. C. Giesler, druggist.

Why We Have One Sided Men.

Faculties must be exercised or they will not grow. Nature is too good an economist to allow us to keep any faculty or function which we do not employ. We can have just what we use and that will constantly increase. Everything else will be gradually taken away from us. Man becomes strong and powerful and broad just in proportion to the extent and healthfulness of the activity of his faculties, and it must not be one sided, not an exercise of one or two faculties or one set of faculties, or the man will topple over. Balance in life comes from the healthful exercise of all the faculties. One reason why we have so many one sided men in this country is because they pursue one idea, exercise one side of their nature, and of course they cannot retain their balance. This is one of the curses of specialties. They are a good thing for the race, but death to the individual who pursues his specialty at the expense of the development of the all around man.—O. S. Marden in Success Magazine.

Needed No Introduction.

"It pays sometimes to know a little of the family history of your clients," said a business woman the other day. "It would have saved me from making a blunder if I had known the relations that formerly existed between two men who met in my office. Their business was practically of the same nature, and as I was obliged to leave them together for a few minutes while I attended to some telephone calls I thought it would be more agreeable if I introduced them. They responded rather stiffly, but I put that down to temperament and went into my inner office. When I returned a quarter of an hour later the younger man dispatched his business as quickly as possible and got out. The other said:

"'I was not aware that you were acquainted with my ex-brother-in-law.'

"'Brother-in-law?' I asked stupidly.

"'Yes. My sister got a divorce from him last summer.'"—Brooklyn Eagle.

When You Lose Your Taste.

"When people lose their taste," said a physician, "they retain their old likes and dislikes just the same. Miss Smith, for instance, can't tell a slice of roast beef from a fried onion, but she disliked onions before her taste went, and therefore she won't eat them now. People lose their taste through severe illnesses, and with the loss of taste the loss of smell nearly always goes; hence queer, cruel practical jokes. I know a woman without smell to whom a pint of onion juice was sent in a cologne bottle. She deluged herself with this onion juice and appeared in a crowded heated ballroom.

"To a man without taste or smell all cheeses must be alike, yet old Brownlow won't touch limburger. He says it would make him ill, and probably it would. It is very odd to hear these deficient people praising and condemning food and drink. They do it, though. They do it as heartily as you or I. I have seen old Brownlow send away in disgust a glass of white wine, claiming it was corked, while at the same time he ate calmly an addled egg."—Baltimore Herald.

The Mosaic Flooring of the Desert.

The northern portion of the Colorado desert is paved with the most wonderful pebbles in the world, in many parts so exquisitely laid as to defy successful imitation by the most skilled worker in mosaic flooring. These pebbles are made of porphyry, agates, carnelian, quartz, crystals, garnets, chrysolite and other such beautiful materials. They are packed together so that the surface composed of them is like a floor, and they look as if pressed into it with a roller. As a rule, they are of nearly uniform size, and each one is polished brilliantly, as if oiled and rubbed. Most of them are perfect spheres, and the reflection from them of the sun's rays is gorgeous beyond description. Each convex surface gives back a ray of light, and the ground for miles seems as if literally paved with gems. Thus the whole surface of the plain is a combination of myriads of reflectors, each pebble being so highly polished that it is like a mirror, and it is believed that the lakes of the desert mirage are produced by this means. The pebbles are polished by the loose sand which is blown hither and thither.

"SAVED MY LIFE"

—That's what a prominent druggist said of Scott's Emulsion a short time ago. As a rule we don't use or refer to testimonials in addressing the public, but the above remark and similar expressions are made so often in connection with Scott's Emulsion that they are worthy of occasional note. From infancy to old age Scott's Emulsion offers a reliable means of remedying improper and weak development, restoring lost flesh and vitality, and repairing waste. The action of Scott's Emulsion is no more of a secret than the composition of the Emulsion itself. What it does it does through nourishment—the kind of nourishment that cannot be obtained in ordinary food. No system is too weak or delicate to retain Scott's Emulsion and gather good from it.

LIKE RUSSIAN SERFS.

The Political Condition of American Women Needs Sympathy.

The women of the United States can sympathize with the poor, oppressed men of Russia who offered, as one of their grievances in the appeal which they were not allowed to present to the czar, that they had no voice in regard to the taxes which were laid upon them. Neither have women over here in this land of perfect freedom, where all have equal rights. Indeed, we are at a greater disadvantage in this respect than those Russian men, for, while they have only one czar, who stands between them and political liberty, we have millions. We have to beg for it not at the feet of one man, but of all men, and the ordeal is quite as trying for a woman of pride and sensibility as it was for those Russian workingmen to march through the ranks of armed Cossacks.

There is scarcely a man in the United States who does not boil with indignation at the thought of those men in Russia deprived of all voice in their own government, and yet, so far as the principle is concerned, the women of our own country are in precisely the same situation, but our men do not even grow lukewarm over the fact. "Oh, but the situation is so different here," they say, "for we govern women wisely and generously and give them no cause for complaint." But that is not the point, even if it were true, which it is not, for there is scarcely a spot in the United States where women, through their clubs and organizations, are not protesting against many existing laws, while in all our large cities they are roused to exasperation over municipal conditions in which they are allowed no voice. The outrage perpetrated against the women of this country by refusing them any participation in the government under which they must live is just as flagrant as that committed by Russia against her men.

There is a growing sentiment in the United States that women should be allowed to vote on questions of taxation. Russian men, however, do not limit their demands to merely a voice on their taxes. They demand also the larger right to a representation in both their local and national government. And so those in our own country who would limit women to simply a taxpayer's suffrage fail utterly to recognize the underlying principle on which our republic is founded or to understand how small a matter is the payment of taxes compared to the vital questions which are settled at the polls on election day. It is a commendable thing to sympathize with the Russians in their struggle for independence, but it would be well for the men of the United States to remember that justice, like charity, should begin at home.

IDA HUSTED HARPER.

DO WOMEN WANT TO VOTE?

If Granted the Right, Their Sense of Duty Will Justify It.

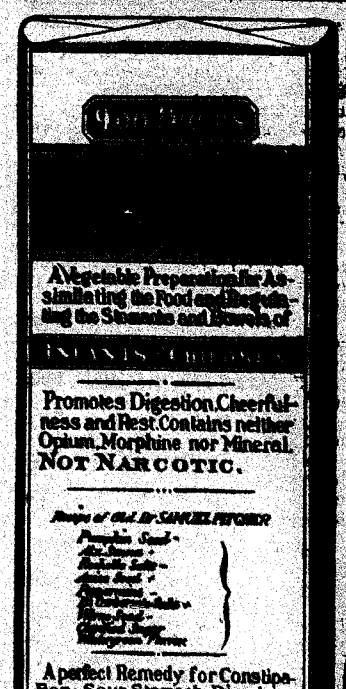
Assuming for the sake of argument what has never yet been proved by a canvas or otherwise, that the majority of women do not want to vote, what then? The world would have stood still from the beginning if we had waited for the majority to move. A majority of those most benefited by any reform have never wanted that reform. Comparatively few of our slaves wanted freedom. In 1837 John Quincy Adams attempted to introduce in congress a petition from slaves asking for the continuance of slavery. What right have other women, though a majority, to deprive these women of the opportunity to vote if that opportunity be their just right?

The dog in the manger policy has never appealed to the reason or to the justice of mankind. Those who oppose suffrage for women are protecting no rights of their own, are defending themselves against no "additional burdens," for the right to vote, which is only the opportunity to vote, thrusts the ballot on no one. Voting is not compulsory. No man is compelled to vote now, and every election shows a considerable percentage of men who do not vote.

Duty and desire alone are the forces which control the exercise of suffrage. If, as is sometimes argued, it would be a woman's duty to vote if she could, it is no less a woman's duty now. The same questions demand her attention; the same needs cry out to her. To deprive those women who want to vote of the opportunity to vote is to deprive them of rights to spare other women not from burdens, but feelings, since the sight of their sisters at the polls may shame them to a sense of duty.

GAIL LAUGHLIN.

AN ENLIGHTENED GOVERNOR



Kansas Executive Falls In Line For Woman Suffrage.

Governor Hoch of Kansas has recommended woman suffrage in his message to the new legislature. He says:

"In 1899 Theodore Roosevelt, then governor of New York, said in his message, 'I call the attention of the legislature to the desirability of gradually extending the sphere in which the suffrage can be exercised by women,' and I am glad to follow such an illustrious example in a similar suggestion to you. Municipal suffrage has worked no ill to womanhood or the state and seems to be satisfactory to the people."

Municipal suffrage was granted to the women of Kansas in 1887. In 1901 a motion made in the legislature to repeal it was voted down almost unanimously "amid a ripple of amusement."

The first governor to recommend woman suffrage in his message to a state legislature was ex-Governor Claflin of Massachusetts, who has just died. He did it in 1871, when it was looked upon as a great innovation. Now some governor does it almost every year.

Pulling Ostrich Feathers.

A man who runs an ostrich farm, asked the other day as to the method of gathering the feathers, admitted that they were pulled out of the birds once in every eight months. Was the process painful?

"Well," he replied, "about equal to pulling out your eyeteeth." A good many ladies who wear ostrich feathers do so in the belief that they are thereby serving the cause of humanity. As a matter of fact, they are encouraging the most cruel and barbarous torture which man can inflict upon a bird.—Sporting and Dramatic News.

NEVER DID ANY WORK.

But Were on the Payroll of Fredonia Postoffice.

FORMER POSTMASTER TESTIFIED

Swore He Had Never Seen One of the Nominal Employes and Some of Them Were Employed Elsewhere Letters From G. W. Beavers Introduced In Hooker Investigation.

Albany, March 22.—The feature thus far in the investigation by the assembly judiciary committee of the charges against Supreme Court Justice Warren B. Hooker was the admission to the committee by former Postmaster Arthur R. Moore of Fredonia that several employes on the payroll of his office never performed any duty in his office, some of them indeed being actually employed elsewhere at the same time. At least one of these nominal employes he swore he had never seen—he did not actually know in fact that any such person existed.

Justice Hooker himself was not present, his absence being explained by delays to trains due to the storm; but his interests were watched by his counsel, John B. Stanchfield, Lewis E Carr and Judge W. N. Goodrich of New York.

The objections of the attorneys for Justice Hooker made last Thursday to copies of official documents on file at Washington which Henry B. Coman, attorney for the judiciary committee, endeavored to submit as evidence having been overcome by the visit of a representative of Justice Hooker to Washington and a verification of the copies made, these letters, referring first to the appointment of Frank P. Ball to the Fredonia postoffice as a laborer, were introduced by Mr. Coman without objection.

Letters From G. W. Beavers.

The letters are among those alleged to have passed between Justice Hooker and G. W. Beavers, superintendent of the salary and allowance division; First Assistant Postmaster General Perry Heath and other officials of the postoffice department, and Postmaster Moore at Fredonia, relative to the appointments in connection with which improprieties are alleged against Justice Hooker.

The appointments especially concerned are those of Frank P. Ball, Minerva Jeffrey, Ora Caldwell, Thomas O'Neill, Katherine K. Clark and Maurice Hooker; and irregularities are charged also in connection with rental transactions connected with the postoffice at Dunkirk.

A copy of a letter from a postoffice inspector to a department official, stating that appointment of Katherine Clark was useless and suggesting her reduction from money order clerk to substitute clerk, was objected to by Mr. Carr on the ground that it was simply the opinion of an inspector.

Former Postmaster Moore testified that the first he knew of the appointment of Ball was on receipt of a communication from Washington announcing that fact, and in a conversation with Justice Hooker in the postoffice Oct. 11, 1898.

He swore that substantially Mr. Hooker had stated that he wished to do something for Frank Ball and thought that if he could get him an appointment in the Fredonia postoffice it would satisfy him.

Mr. Moore testified that he had never made a request for additional employes and that the previous cost of the work of cleaning out, done by Ball, was from $4 to $6 per quarter. "In the month of January, 1899, Ball was promoted from laborer to clerk, not at my request."

In January, 1899, Mr. Moore testified that Henry Pemberton, Ora Caldwell, Minerva Jeffrey, George Cooper and Thomas O'Neill were appointed, but he knew nothing about it until he received a letter from Washington announcing the appointments.

Never Reported For Duty.

"Did Minerva Jeffrey ever report for duty?" asked Mr. Coman.

"No, sir."

"Did you ever pay her?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you ever see Minerva Jeffrey?"

"No, sir."

"How did you come to pay her for services she never performed?"

"I received a communication signed by Beavers, to pay her."

Further testimony was to the effect that the pay rolls were sent to Washington for her signature; that Henry J. Pemberton had never reported and never worked and had never been paid, his appointment being cancelled at Washington. Mr. Moore testified that was the case with George Cooper, and that Thomas O'Neill had worked and is now employed as a carrier. He testified that Ora Caldwell, while appointed in January, did not report until April and that he afterward learned that he was employed in the Dunkirk locomotive works.

"How often did you see Ball, after his appointment?"

"Possibly two or three times a month on the street or on a street car."

Here women voted for the first time and defeated the proposition for a $65,000 sewer system.

William A. Murray, Rep., was elected at Fort Edward, where one Democratic trustee was chosen and the ticket otherwise Republican.

In Herkimer county Union tickets were chosen in Middleville and Newport, Democratic ticket in Dolgeville and Frankfort and Republican ticket in Herkimer.

James W. Cool, Rep., was elected president of Glens Falls.

The Citizens' Independent ticket headed by Dr. J. V. Mynderse, for village president, was elected without opposition in Scotia.

Citizens' Ticket Won.

Malone, March 22.—At the village election in Malone the Citizens' ticket headed by a Republican, Thomas Hinds, as president and Moses Bessete, William Dempsey and B. A. Whitney as trustees was elected by 123 majority, defeating the straight Republican ticket. At the Fort Covington village election Dennis McCarthy was elected president on an Independent ticket in opposition to a Union Citizens' ticket by one majority. The trustees on the Independent ticket were also elected.

Democratic Mayor of Hudson.

Hudson, March 22.—William S. Hallenbeck, Dem., was elected mayor by a majority of 256. The rest of the Democratic city ticket with but one exception was elected.

BEEF TRUST INQUIRY.

Every Witness Before Grand Jury to Be Guarded by a Detective.

Chicago, March 22.—Fifteen secret service men have been brought to Chicago to guard witnesses who will testify before the special grand jury which today began investigating the so-called beef trust.

So great is the desire of the federal officials to maintain a strict secrecy in the investigation that every witness who testifies before the inquisitorial body will be closely guarded by one of the detectives.

C. B. Morrison, who was appointed United States district attorney, declared that a person speaking to any of the witnesses will be liable to be held in contempt of court, even if the speaking should go no further than inquiring the name of the witness.

Twenty men have qualified as grand jurors. It is hoped by the federal officials that the list of jurymen will be completed today.

President's West Point Appointees.

Washington, March 22.—The president has designated the principals and alternates for examination for admission to the United States military academy in the class entering the academy in 1906. Among the principals are: Thomas Jonathan Jackson Christian, grandson of General (Stonewall) Jackson; Creswell Garlington, nephew of Brigadier General J. Franklin Bell, U. S. A.; Burton Young Read, grandson of Lieutenant General S. B. M. Young, and Charles Walter Rowell, son of Captain Charles W. Rowell, Second infantry, killed in action at Santiago, Cuba, and grandson of the late Major General Frank Wheaton.

Shot Herself and Burned House.

Syracuse, N. Y., March 22.—A special to the Herald from Cortland says: Mrs. Frances Cole Grove, a widow, set fire to her house and then fired three shots at herself in an attempt at suicide. Finding that her efforts to kill herself were in vain, she frantically called to her neighbors to help her out of the burning building. James D. Ellis, who lives across the street, heard her cries and securing a ladder, took the woman from a second-story window. The house burned. The woman was removed to the hospital. The physicians believe that she will recover.

Sixth Day of Checker Tournament.

Boston, March 22.—The Americans broke even with their British opponents in the sixth day's play of the international checker tournament, winning five of the 10 games played. The day's winners on the British team were: Searight, Buchanan, Halliwell, R. Jordan and Morrall. The American winners were Denvir, who defeated Morrall twice; Horr, who defeated Hynd twice, and Barker. Total score: Britishers 45, Americans 24, drawn 171.

Governor Signed Wainwright Bill.

Albany, March 21.—Governor Higgins has signed the bill of Assemblyman Wainwright which in effect provides that the United States flag shall not be used for advertising purposes after Sept. 1 next. The court of appeals decided that the previous law was invalid insofar as it declared against the use of the flag on property, as it deprived the owners of such property of the right to sell their wares. It is understood that the American Tobacco company will contest the constitutionality of the new law.

Weather Indications.

Snow flurries Wednesday; Thursday partly cloudy and warmer; fresh northerly winds, becoming variable.

KUROPATKIN REMAINS.

Halted at Harbin and Returned to the Front.

COMMANDS FIRST MANCHURIAN.

Russian Retreat Continues Uneventfully—Preparations For Mobilization. Damaged Bridges Impede Japanese Pursuit—Revised Figures of Losses at Battle of Mukden.

St. Petersburg, March 22.—The Russian army in Manchuria is still to have the services of General Kuropatkin. Sinking all feeling of personal bitterness and all the old-time enmity between himself and General Linevitch, the former commander-in-chief volunteered to remain in any capacity with the army which he had so long commanded. The tender has been accepted by Emperor Nicholas and gratefully received by the new leader of the army.

Authoritative news of this remarkable step was known in Manchuria much earlier than in St. Petersburg. General Kuropatkin, having paused on his homeward journey at Harbin, started southward the afternoon of March 20, amidst a most remarkable farewell from residents of Harbin and soldiers who are on the way to fill out the ranks of the depleted army. The send off was a mere foretaste of what awaits General Kuropatkin at the front.

The retreat is apparently progressing uneventfully. No dispatches of moment were received yesterday.

Preparations are now making for the mobilization of a number of detachments, not, however, on a general scale, the preliminary orders affecting twenty-two districts in the governments of Odessa, Warsaw and Moscow.

ATTACK ON SAKHALIN.

Urged by Japanese Press and In Public Meetings.

Victoria, B. C., March 22.—According to advices received here by the steamer Hyades an expedition may be sent by Japan against the island of Sakhalin. May 7 will be the 30th anniversary of the occupation of the island by the Russians and demonstrations are being made and petitions circulated demanding its recapture by Japan on that date. A movement against Sakhalin would probably be coincident with an attack on Vladivostok, which it is reported will take place as soon as the ice breaks up in the north.

The financial drain upon Japan is being keenly felt, much poverty is reported. Baron Sone, minister of finance, in a speech at Tokio stated that while the war expenses have already reached a billion yen the strain upon the nation is not serious.

An alleged case of boodling in connection with the construction of government buildings is causing a stir in the diet and in the press of Japan.

A new railroad line is projected to connect Wiju and New Chwang. A large number of locomotives have been ordered from the United States.

Twenty-five destroyers, each of 350 tons, are under construction in the several Japanese shipyards.

An English company has been awarded the contract for raising the sunken war vessels in Port Arthur harbor. The former Russian cruiser Variag, sunk at Chemulpo, is being rapidly repaired and will soon be commissioned under the Japanese flag.

Russian Losses 175,000; Japs' 50,000.

Tokio, March 22.—No reports of the Russian 'retreat' or Japanese pursuit were received today, which is strengthening the belief that the Russians plan to hold the line from Changchun to Kirin. The Japanese continue to follow closely General Linevitch's rear guard, but the damaged bridges impede their progress and possibly will create sufficient delay to permit the Russians to reconcentrate, reinforce, partially reorganize and construct works at Changchun and Kirin.

It is reported that a portion of the Vladivostok garrison has been withdrawn and hurried to Harbin, but no confirmation of the rumor is obtainable.

Revised figures of the Japanese losses at the battle of Mukden place the number at 50,000 and revised estimates of the Russian losses from the commencement of the battle of Mukden and ending with the fighting at Tie pass place the total at 175,000 killed, wounded or captured.

Coal For Russian Fleet.

London, March 22.—The correspondent at Aden of the Daily Mail reports that 34 steamers laden with 100,000 tons of coal are waiting at Jebutil for the Russian fleet, which is expected there at the end of the month.

The Russian third Pacific squadron, under Admiral Nebogatoff, has left Suda bay for Port Said.

Russians Have No Maps of Country.

Gunshu Pass, 108 miles north of Tie Pass, Manchuria, March 22.—The Japanese losses are estimated at the Russian headquarters to be 100,000.

Some of the troops employed to cover the Russian retreat from Mukden were badly demoralized, losing their way in the hills eastward and only now are rejoining their own divisions.

So certain was General Kuropatkin of being able to hold Mukden that maps of the country northward were not even distributed. Kuropatkin, however, resolved to accept battle against his better judgment, owing to the impatience of St. Petersburg for victory, and he was confirmed in this decision by false calculations of Field Marshal Oyama's strength.

Bomb Exploded Among Soldiers.

Warsaw, March 22.—A bomb thrown from the window of a house in Volsk street at 9 o'clock last evening exploded in the midst of a passing patrol composed of police and infantry. Six soldiers and two policemen were dangerously wounded. They were removed to the military hospital. The assailant escaped.

EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE.

Plan For Election of 28 Directors by the Policy Holders.

New York, March 22.—A plan for the gradual admission of the policy holders of the Equitable Life Assurance society of the United States to a share in the control of its affairs was adopted by the directors of the society.

The plan provides for an amendment to the society's charter so that 28 of its 52 directors shall at the expiration of four years have been elected by the policy holders and the remaining 24 by the stockholders.

Under the new plan seven of the 13 directors annually elected will be chosen by the policy holders and six by the stockholders. The new method of control will therefore become effective after four years.

The adoption of this plan is the outcome of an agitation by President James W. Alexander and others for the mutualization of the society which began several weeks ago. Mr. Alexander pointed out that the control of the society rested in $100,000 stock capital, a majority of which was under the control of James H. Hyde, the vice president, and that such a power in the hands of one man was "fraught with danger."

The board of directors of the society voted on Feb. 16 that the policy holders should be given a right to vote for directors, and appointed a committee of seven directors to arrange the details. The committee was composed of Valentine P. Snyder, James W. Alexander, James H. Hyde, Gage E. Tarbell, Cornelius N. Bliss, T. Dewitt Cuyler and Chauncey M. Depew.

The report was signed by every member of the committee and was adopted by the board of directors, together with the amended charter. The official statement of the action of the directors was signed by President Alexander and Vice Presidents Hyde, Tarbel and Wilson.

BRITAIN'S FISCAL POLICY.

Free Traders Say Government Has Definitely Rejected Chamberlain's Idea.

London, March 22.—Cabinet meetings decided that in future the government will not use pressure upon its followers in regard to the opposition's resolutions framed to commit the government on the fiscal question.

As a result the resolution announced for the night session of March 22 expressing the opposition of the house to a tax on imported manufactured articles will probably be carried by a comfortable majority.

The decision of the cabinet was backed up by Joseph Chamberlain's followers when at a meeting of 78 Unionist tariff reformers it was decided not to participate in the debates or divisions on the resolution, the vote on which will, however, be interesting because it will be a "go-as-you-please."

A majority for the resolution will not be considered a defeat for the government, whose supporters express themselves as having rejected on March 8 the resolution declaring that permanent unity of the British empire could not be secured through a system of preferential duties based on protective taxation of food. This move on the part of Premier Bafour is the political sensation of the hour, and is being hailed with great joy by free traders, who claim that it is a definite desertion of Mr. Chamberlain by his former cabinet associates.

Protest Against Rockefeller Gift.

Boston, March 22.—Congregational ministers representing Boston and various sections of New England have forwarded to the American board of commissioners for foreign missions a protest against the acceptance by the board of a gift of $100,000 from John D. Rockefeller on the ground that the Standard Oil company, of which Mr. Rockefeller is the head, "stands before the public under repeated and recent formidable indictments in specific terms for methods which are morally iniquitous and socially destructive."

Safe Robber Captured.

New York, March 22.—An attempt was made to secure from the safe of James E. March, a contractor and Republican leader, $151,000 in railroad bonds, $10,000 in cash and $10,000 worth of jewelry. While Mr. March was reading in his office, a man who had entered by a back door tiptoed to the safe, which was open, and was proceeding to help himself to the valuables when noticed by the contractor. After a short chase and a sharp tussle Mr. March overpowered the man and handed him over to the police.

Road Distribution Problem.

The plan proposed for improving one mile in ten of each of the miles of highway in each of the counties of New York State, so as to make an equitable distribution of the mileage to each county under the $50,000,000 bond issue, gives at first glance the impression that 90 per cent. of the highways are to be neglected and only those on the fortunate 10 per cent. are to have improved roads, and that they are to be benefited at the expense of the rest of the town, county and State. This is only an impression, and it is quite possible to demonstrate that it is so. Those advocating the plan of distributing roads in this way say that the main highways are those which carry the heaviest traffic of each county and each town, and these, roughly speaking, bear a relationship of one mile in ten to the rest of the roads in the county, and not by any means one mile in ten to the total mileage in each town. In other words, the main highways of the county form a county system when designated in heavy lines on the map, in which some towns have long stretches and other towns have short stretches of this system, because of the irregular shapes of the towns. When a county system is laid out in this way there will be no farm in the county further away than five miles from an improved highway, and 60 per cent. of the farms will be either directly on or within three miles of an improved highway, so that practical benefits from road development, when laid out in this way, are in the interest of the entire farming community of each county. Why is this so? Well, if you are good in mathematics, take the State of New York, with its 50,000 square miles of area, consider that you own the entire State, that it is perfectly level and perfectly square, and that you intend to plant it all to wheat and want to haul your crop as cheaply as possible on roads to New York Harbor to go to Liverpool. Make the State a perfect square, and then see how many miles of highway it would take, laying them out checker-board fashion, to average a 2½-mile haul to the main roads from the center line of each field to the lines of your checker-board roads. See if you can work it out.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by druggists at 75 cents.

Lamps Used Before Candles.

Lamps were used before candles. They date back almost as far as history goes and were common in ancient Egypt, China, Assyria, Greece and Rome. Lamp, from the Greek lampas, a torch, and candle, from kandeel, the Egyptian word for a common lamp, originally meant the same thing, and the Mosaic candlestick held oil lamps, not candles, as we now use the word.

Man early improved on the torches of the Homeric age and caught the idea of obtaining light from porous fiber soaked in animal or vegetable oils. Lamps of brass, bronze and stone have been found in the pyramids and in ancient Indian temples, and common terra cotta ones were in general use for domestic purposes in Greece in the fourth century B. C. The earliest candles we hear of were those of the ancient Romans made of rushes coated with fat or wax.

SUPREME COURT NOMINATION

Hon. P. W. Cullinan, in a Manly and Dignified Letter, Withdraws from the Contest in the Interest of Party Harmony.

TO THE REPUBLICAN ELECTORS OF OSWEGO COUNTY:

Since assenting to the use of my name as a candidate for the position of Justice of the Supreme Court, I have received many gratifying expressions of support which assure me of the delegates in the approaching conventions in this, the pivotal county of the judicial district. I am aware also that Judge Wright has many strong friends in this county equally sanguine of a like result in his behalf. I am forced to a conclusion, however, that a contest for delegates continued to the conventions is likely in the present state of public feeling to lead to much bitterness and strife within the party and might involve the loss of the judgeship to this county.

I do not want the nomination if secured at the expense of plunging the party into a contest prejudicial to its general welfare, nor do I look with favor upon those struggles which in some other localities have degenerated into the employment of those reprehensible methods which, injurious to the body politic at any time by debauching the consciences of constituences, are particularly obnoxious and to be abhorred in a contest for a judicial office. Free institutions will not long survive an impure judiciary.

Deeply grateful to a party which has honored me in the past, perhaps beyond my just deserts, I deem it my duty under existing circumstances, and in the interest of party harmony, to withdraw my name from further consideration as a candidate. In line with the uniform attitude I have taken in my past political life, I shall bow to the will of the people, and in the language of Ex-Governor and Ex-Vice-President Morton, "whether as a private in the ranks, or as a standard-bearer of my party, I shall accept its service in either capacity with equanimity."

Oswego, N. Y., March 28, 1905.

P. W. CULLINAN.

Board of Public Works.

A meeting of the Board of Public Works was held on Monday evening, at which time the street sprinkling tax for 1904, was discussed at length. The bill amounts to $1,000 and it was decided to arrange the tax in shape to be apportioned to the people who had been benefited, and clerk Burdick was instructed to make out the list of streets and property owners so that definite action could be taken at the next meeting.

Mr. Thomas Hunter addressed the Board in behalf of the property owners who had paid the whole of their sidewalk tax. Attorney Mead referred them to section 22, title 3, of the city charter.

Superintendent Ovid Taft was instructed to notify Webb & Marvin, coal dealers, to remove their scale shed, First street and Broadway, so that horses would not be compelled to stand on the sidewalk while coal is being weighed.

The meeting adjourned to April 3, at 8 o'clock.

BERT C. BROWN FOUND GUILTY.

Convicted of Arson By Herkimer Jury—Sentenced to Four Years and Ten Months in Auburn Jail.

(Utica Herald.)

Herkimer, March 28—After a third trial lasting for nearly two weeks in County Court and in the face of two disagreements by former juries, Bert C. Brown of Little Falls, charged with arson in the third degree, was found guilty as charged in the indictment.

The crime for which Brown was convicted was committed on the evening of November 19, 1903, at Little Falls, when his furniture store was set on fire by George Jones, an employe, who is now serving time in Auburn for committing the offense. It was alleged that Brown counseled and abetted the crime. The case has attracted widespread attention throughout the Mohawk Valley.

All the time at yesterday's session was consumed with the summing up addresses of the respective attorneys and Judge Devendorf's charge to the jury, which was completed at 6:27 o'clock last evening. At 6:30 o'clock it was put in the hands of the jury for consideration. Officers Hearth and Heller were sworn and took charge of the jurors, first taking them to the Palmer House for supper, after which they returned to the jury room for their deliberations. In the meantime the defendent, Brown, had been placed in the custody of the Sheriff. He asked permission to send a telegram and also to play a few games of pool, with Deputy Sheriff Grant S. Ingraham. He went to the Palmer House where he succeeded in winning one out of three games played. He spent the night at the Palmer House. The jury deliberated until 4:40 o'clock on Saturday morning at which time the members announced that they agreed.

After the roll call of the jurors and upon their being asked if they had agreed, Foreman Adam Eywits rose and answered, "We have. We find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment."
